were a few places I recognized. A few weeks ago I took Bill down to the radio station to watch me send one of his radiograms and just as I was about half way through with the message he began turning the dials of the transmitter to see what happened and put the whole station out of whack. It took about two hours to get it lined up right. He isn't in love with radio and got a laugh out of what happened, although I didn't at the time.

Bill was out with two other fellows to Service Battery on Flamenco Island and spied a shark in shallow water and was throwing rocks at it. This is near the place where we have been swimming. It isn't a very pleasant thing to think about when you're swimming.

Baseball season is on here in full swing. For recreation, we spend our time swimming, going to the show, visiting the battleships, and submarines at the Balboa Docks, or staying in the barracks to play pool or listen to the radio.

The dry and hot season is nearby, although it rains every day yet. Westover says it has been cool on the Atlantic Side. People say the Pacific side is hotter than the other side, which I am ready to believe. This post is named after the first president of Panama and is the show post of the isthmus. We enjoy our tour here very much, but we realize there's no place like home.

more is a student's library. Frequently, to make an explanation more lucid, he explains the Greek source of a word he has used. He scatters German and Spanish words through his conversations. He recites poems which he has written. He will excuse anything in his listener but stupidity.

Nor is he a weakling physically. He can take a chair by its top rung and hold it stiff-armed horizontally. He pounds his table until it shakes when he is aroused. He walks firmly and knowingly about his five-room bungalow. His supple fingers, skilled once in toolmaking, can smooth pains from aching muscles.

Early this year he was marooned in a Mississippi flood on his way back home from Mexico and a few months later he had a narrow escape from a blazing hotel in the South. He escaped because his police dog warned him in time. The dog escaped, too, but when it jumped to the ground it struck an awning and two months later it died.

Now Adolph has two dogs, Asta, a Belgian shepherd, and her nine-month pup, already Asta obeys Adolph's German commands.

All the commands are in German because Adolph was born there, in the Saar. He deserted from the German army and came to America, paradoxically, to fight in the Spanish-American War. He landed in Philadelphia a month or two after the war had ended.

Almost from the time he entered the country he has been a zealous labor worker. He tells stories of his association with John Mitchell, Tom Kennedy, Mother Jones and Father Curran in the early labor movement. Once, when he was in Schenectady to address a union meeting, he met the great Stainmetz and listened to wise words which he still cherishes. It was Stainmetz who told him that Russia was laying the corner-stone of a new world, but that she could never succeed until she took back religion.

Now, Adolph doesn't know how he's going to get through the winter. He's a little bitter about the way things have worked out. He wouldn't say he wants charity. Somehow, he thinks something is going to turn up that will enable him to earn a living until he can get out and play his accordion again.

In the meantime, if you think of anything Adolph might do to earn a few dollars, you can reach him at the second house in on Claude from Church Street.

POSTSCRIPTS

We understand, incidentally, that Dallas, Texas, which is now preparing to hold a monster world's fair next year, was named for a son of Alexander James Dallas, thereby creating the confusion which exists between this newspaper and one of its New York contacts, whose stenographer invariably mails our letters to Dallas, Texas. What makes it worse is that Houston, Tex., has a Post-Dispatch and we generally have to wait until the government has sent the letter over to Houston to see if that's where it belongs.

Our last crack at the system of mismatching local scholastic football teams: Dallas didn't see a point until its sixth game this season. Dallas Township played four games before it made a touchdown, Lehman had zeros for its first four games. Kingston Township scored 6 in its games with Luzerne and with Meyers, but in the same games Luzerne scored 71 and Meyers scored 34. Finally, in the first three games of the season the four local teams made a total of twelve points. During the same three weeks their opponents, Meyers High School, Luzerne High School, Coughlin, Plains, Edwardsville and Forty Fort, were accumulating 424 points against the local eleven. All because the local men were being thrown against teams which always will be in higher conference.

SANTA WAS BUSY

About 500 boys and girls were here for our toyland opening last Saturday, and Santa Claus was kept mighty busy handing out lolly pops. We hope you enjoyed your visit as much as we did. Santa Claus will be here again next Saturday afternoon December 7th.

Our "Billy and Ruth" contest is in full swing and every mail brings more letters from kids in all directions. All letters entered in the local contest must reach us by December 17th. This contest is open to all children under 16 years of age. The Billy and Ruth toy book tells about the toys and the contest. Ask for one.

Believe it or not—we have 20 different kinds of tricycles, and more than 1000 different Christmas gifts for kids not to mention many practical gifts for older folks.

Dad might be glad to know that the F. H. A. has made arrangements with Santa Claus to finance the purchase of such things as Heat Systems, Dexter Washers, Westinghouse Electric Refrigerators or roofing and water pumps. No down payment and three years to pay.

Our shop men have recently completed a steam heat installation for Gussie Mauselle at Laceyville, a Bathroom and sink for Ernest Marcy at Springville, a Hot Water system for Clyde Pratt at Nicholson and furnaces for Welliver's Garage and T. S. Jones at Montrose. We can furnish any size boiler or furnace from stock.
