

Adventures On Jaunt To Hawaii

Local Folks Begin Three Year Stay On Island

Time, thereby gaining another hour of daylight. Crossed the Texas State line into New Mexico, which was rather rough. Saw graveyards where the graves were piled neatly with heaps of stones—just as you've read they did years ago. Crossed the state line into Arizona, covered 358 miles, and spent the night at Safford, Arizona.

Tuesday: Resumed our journey at 7:15 M. S. T. Saw the Indian hot springs; also an Apache Indian village, all made of straw "wickiups"—looks like small hay stacks with a small door or opening in the side. There was a small fire on the floor in the middle of each, over which the Indians were cooking their breakfasts when we came through. Crossed the Coolidge Dam and entered the Great Western Desert over the Devil's Canyon—which is both too awful and beautiful for description. Cactus of all kinds. Crossed the Superstition Mountain through a tunnel of solid rock, after which we passed gold, silver and copper mines, all in operation. Ate our dinner on the desert, where we picked yellow daisies. Crossed over Superstition Mountain—the Indians believed they would turn to stone if they crossed it. Later we saw our first Palm, Orange, Lemon, Grapefruit, Pomegranate and Date trees, all loaded with ripe fruit. Spent the night with an aunt in Phoenix.

Wednesday: Started at 6 M. S. T. Crossed the State line into California. Crossed the Mojave Desert, which is much different from the Great Western. It does not have any cactus or grass—just pure yellow sand, rippled in heaps and piles. Later we came to huge orchards of orange, lemon and grapefruit trees, all loaded with their golden fruit and glossy leaves. Lots of beautiful flowers or we thought they were them—not having seen this island. Arrived in San Diego and had dinner with Bernie and Elsie Manion. Spent the night in San Diego.

The Pacific At Last

Thursday: Left San Diego at 8:30 to begin our last land lap of 125 miles. Had our first sight of the Pacific Ocean, which, by the way, had a very much different coast than the Atlantic—no white beach sand, just mud and rocks. Also saw what was to be our home for the next six days—the S. S. Malolo. Put our trunks on board and then visited a beauty parlor for a shampoo, wave and manicure. Marvin and Thomas also having haircuts, etc. Spent the night in Los Angeles.

Friday: Reported to the S. S. Malolo at 8:30 a. m. Put the car on board and went aboard ourselves at 9:30. The boat left the dock at exactly 12 noon, when we were immediately called to lunch by chimes being played through the halls. The ocean was calm, and although rather dizzy, everyone seemed to be enjoying the trip. I received ten letters as our boat left the pier, together with some pictures, and as they were the first we had had since we left home they were read and reread over and over. We ate dinner with a full dining room and the next morning passed through the Golden Gate at daybreak and entered San Francisco, where it was raining and foggy, and where I caught a heavy cold which, of course, had to settle on my lungs, keeping me in bed under the care of the nurse all the way across.

Five Boats Sink

The boat left the harbor of San Francisco at 6 p. m. and that evening was the last in the dining room for me until the Aloha Dinner on Wednesday evening. Saturday night a terrible storm came up which took five ships down about 500 miles north of San Francisco, with all lives lost. But although the Malolo plunged and rolled like a raging beast, she rode it high, wide and handsome. Sunday morning nearly everyone was confined in their rooms. Marvin, Thomas and I were all seasick, but Tommy snapped right out of it and had the time of his life. Being the only child on board in that class, he was everybody's pet and made friends with them all from the bell-boys and officers to the passengers, evening first class. Marvin was not so well, but able to be about. The boat was a floating hotel, with everything in it one could imagine. The days passed with music, dancing, games, movies, etc., until it came THURSDAY: January 16, 1936, when we came in sight of the Hawaiian Islands just at daybreak. They looked like darker clouds along the horizon. About 8 a. m. we were met by a boat from Oahu—also a thunderstorm. And later Hawaiian men and boys swam along beside the ship catching coins flung into the water by the passengers. Came alongside the dock at 9 a. m. where the native bands played and I heard the grandest singing I has ever been my luck to hear by two Hawaiian women and two men. Mrs. Olenik and Marion met us, bringing leis for each of us, but Commander Griffen was the first one to us, also bringing leis for each, so we entered the Paradise Island in full regalia. Commander Griffen put his car and himself at our disposal all day and believe me, he is some friend to have in a strange place—as well as any other place; they don't come twice like him. He had evidently canvassed this whole island to find suitable living quarters for us before we arrived.

RADIO FINDS SON

Dave Richards of Kingston a member of a life boat crew for two days was passed over WBBB by his mother and being in the vicinity of Kingston with his boat came to Dallas to put a call through the local exchange and inform his mother of his whereabouts. The call was handled as an emergency by the Commonwealth Telephone company who put him in contact with his relatives immediately.
