Rain Insufficient To Offset Drought

Fields Still Below Average Despite Week's Showers

Although more drizzles came this week to help local crops, their condition remained below normal, largely because of the cool nights. Farmers reported yesterday that the rains were barely enough to keep under-sized crops growing.

Pastures and meadows benefitted most from the rains, but are still not up to average. The first cuttings of hay last week and this are mostly light. Truck crops have generally improved during the last two or three weeks and are considerably better in the vicinity of Dallas than in some of the Western parts of the State, where drought has taken a serious toll.

Wheat and rye top the list of crops and grain seems to be ripening despite the recent dry spell and the cool nights. Farmers believe additional rain in the next week will enable them to overcome the handicaps of the early season.

New Hillside Cereal Factory Turns Out Car-Load Of Rice Puffs Daily

NEWEST LOCAL INDUSTRY EMPLOYS 18 PERSONS

Superior Cereal Company's factory at Hillside, this community's newest industry, is working at near capacity as the result of orders coming in from practically every State along the Atlantic seaboard. The factory is located in the big stone building formerly occupied by the Hygienic Dairy company not far from the Spring Brook Water company plant and the Conyngham estate.

Although the plant was formerly located in Roslyn, Va., and has been operating here only two months, it employs eighteen persons and has a capacity of about a carload of wheat and a carload of Louisiana rice a month. The products made by the company are toasted wheat and rice puffs, popular breakfast cereals.

The wheat kernels are placed in gas heated machines resembling trench mortars and there subjected to high temperatures under pressure until they are expanded to about five times normal size. At the proper time the wheat puffs are shot from the guns with a loud explosion of escaping kernels and air into wire cages. Later they are put through other processes to get rid of broken kernels. This refuse is saved and sold to manufacturers of animal foods.

Storage rooms for wheat and rice and the guns for puffing it are on the second floor of the building. From this floor, chutes lead to the lower floor where the finished product is packaged, weighed and boxed for shipment to leading wholesale grocers throughout the eastern United States. Local distributors of Superior Cereal Company products are such firms as: Williams Brothers, John Williamson Company, and Southerland and McMillan. Superior Cereals can be distinguished from other similar products on local grocers' shelves by their unique sanitary paper bag packages which permit a clear view of the big puffed kernels of wheat and rice. The company is the only one in the country using natural brown unpolished rice in its products which accounts for much of its fine flavor and popularity.

Homer Weiss of Kingston, general manager of the plant, in commenting on the selection of Hillside as its manufacturing point, told a Post representative visiting the plant, that he and John Curtis of Wilkes-Barre, president of the company, had spent two months looking for desirable locations and had finally selected this region because of its fresh air, healthful surroundings and general cleanliness. He said they had done this in the face of other disadvantages such as absence of railroad siding and manufacturing gas. Gas is used in heating the guns for puffing to high temperatures. Pyrofax gas is now used with highly successful results.

While the company is new to this region it has been in existence for some years and has built up a nice market throughout the east. In its new location with plenty of room for expansion and with newly installed facilities for manufacturing, there is every likelihood that it will employ an ever increasing number of local people.
