Spring-like Days Are Not For Long

Blooming Buds To Be Nipped By Plenty Of Cold Weather

It was a case of April weather in January in this section this week.

Hibernating animals including the bear, raccoon and skunk have been reported in the woods this month and robins and blue birds have been reported close to town. A toad, which usually lies dormant all winter in deep rock crevices or in cavities of hollow trees, was seen hopping about in the woods a few days ago.

In nearby mountains, tree buds are starting to swell and some of the more early woodland flowers have started to bloom. Wild gooseberry bushes in the more sunny and protected spots were showing green shoots.

Pussy willows, which are among the first to bloom in the Spring, burst their bud scales this month and decorated many streams and marshes with their furry-coated blooms. Three toads or night peepers were heard on several mild evenings in the northern section of the county.

These and many other reports are proof enough that Spring was here temporarily this month, but we hear that weather experts warn that "there will be plenty of cold weather" before Spring makes a lengthy visit to Dallas.

How Will You Cool Your Milk Next Summer?

Pennsylvania Health Department requires that night's milk be delivered to the receiving station at a temperature below 60 degrees. An electric or gas engine power cooler will do the work much quicker than ice, and actually is cheaper. In addition to this, you would be relieved of all the labor and inconvenience of handling ice, and you would know for sure that your milk would reach the station with a low bacteria count and with the proper temperature.
