The SNAPSHOT GUILD LET THE SUN WORK FOR YOU

Watch for unusual lighting when taking snapshots of outdoor scenes.

MANY of you who want to take your photography seriously and get some really attractive, artistic pictures would probably like to have some further information on proper lighting in taking snapshots. The lighting of the subject has so much to do with securing that quality often referred to as "atmosphere" in a picture. There are a number of ways in which a photograph may be given apparent depth, or third dimension. Taking pictures when there are long shadows, getting a reflection in the foreground, using strong side-lighting or back-lighting, and timing the exposure just right so that the detail of objects in shadow is not blocked out, are precautions that contribute much to the desired effect. Suppose we consider each of these separately. Shadows, thrown in long drawn-out splotches across walls and walks, makes one feel, more than anything else, that he is looking into a picture instead of looking on a flat piece of paper carrying images of recorded objects. The foreground should be well broken up with shadows so that there is not too much contrast between it and the rest of the picture. When a body of water can be included as part of the foreground, then there are really wonderful opportunities for adding depth. The reflection will carry ones attention back and away from the foreground and into the picture—and lead to the principal point of interest. The only precaution necessary when snapping a picture with a foreground of water in strong sunlight is to watch that a swell or wave does not throw reflected sparkles of light upon the lens, as that may fog the picture. Along the roads and trails through forests where long spears of sunlight pierce into the shadows there are unlimited opportunities for striking pictures with depth. If the foreground of your picture is not well lighted and you want to get the shafts of sunlight shooting through the shady parts of the background an exposure slightly shorter than you would ordinarily make is advisable. Don't just open your camera and shoot when taking pictures. Give your subject some thought and in doing so you will be rewarded with pictures you will be proud of and they will whet your appetite for many more snapshotting expeditions. Viewpoint means much and is an important factor in picture taking. It, too, has much to do with the perspective we get in pictures. If the perspective is not pleasing to the eye, it will not be pleasing in the picture, so, as I have said before, study all the possibilities and angles of your proposed picture before you snap it.

BRAWL ON PICNIC TRAIN FORCES POLICE TO STOP AT SHAVERTOWN

State and railroad police are still searching for the pugnacious picknickers who started the brawl which necessitated stopping a special train at Shavertown Tuesday night about 8.

The train was carrying members of the Coxton Welfare Association and their families from Harvey's Lake to Wilkes-Barre, after a day's outing at the lake picnic grounds. There were a number of free-for-alls during the day, according to reports, but the most ambitious one started on the train going home.

Unable to quell the disturbance, Officer Harold Mitten of Lehigh Valley police, ordered the train stopped at Shavertown. He summoned the firemen of Shavertown and Pennsylvania Motor Police for assistance but the culprits escaped.

Women and children were alarmed by the brawling and when the train stopped they poured out. People in the vicinity saw the picknickers resting on the railroad bank and started a report that the passengers had fallen from the train in a riot.

Several women were reported to have added their bit of hair-pulling to the melee. Captain W. S. Hennig expressed opinion the men who started the fight will be caught and said they will be prosecuted severely.
