Mrs. Wilson Regrets That She Can't Work

been dead for six years. The last year of his life, the Wilsons celebrated their 62nd wedding anniversary at the Hoover home in Dallas. Today, Mrs. Wilson has 108 living descendants. There are 11 children, 42 grandchildren, 54 great grandchildren, and one great great grandchild, the son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Wendlin of Lakewood, N. J.

Most of the original children live in this locality, with the exception of a brother in Berwick, and a sister at Lakewood.

Mrs. Wilson was born Dec. 7, 1851, in Pittston, in the same house in which her mother had been born. The daughter of Jude L. and Rachel Jenkins Vandenburg, she moved to Dallas when she was 5 years old. Her future husband was the son of Peter and Jane Emmons Wilson, and was born in Dallas April 28, 1849. The Wilsons were married 69 years ago next Christmas.

They continued to live in Dallas until the present Mrs. Hoover had been born, and then they began their travels about the country.

Since Mr. Wilson was a sawyer, the family found it necessary to move to wherever there was a logging operation. "Most of the time, we didn't even have a decent house to move into," Mrs. Wilson recalled. "Usually we had to live in a broken down old shack, I would repair it, and with the help of the children clean up the clearing around it. And then, just as we had begun to get the house so it seemed clean enough to live in, the logging would end and we'd have to move again. I got so tired of moving that I used to pray we would all grow roots, and never be able to move a step again."

Reunion of the Wilson descendants is usually held in conjunction with the annual reunion of old settlers at Stull, maintained for the last eight years, the reunion takes place the first Sunday in August.

The meeting at Stull this year was held Sunday, August 7. It was attended by Mr. and Mrs. Wesley Hoover and Andrew Wilson and his wife, of Luzerne.

BULFORD REUNION
