Home-made Candy Business Clicks

Local Woman Establishes New Industry In Her Home

Believe it or not, some of last year's Easter Eggs hatched. But instead of bringing forth nice, white, fluffie bunnies, they gave birth to a bouncing, healthy industry, which has been rapidly expanding ever since.

Dorothy K. Worth's Homemade Candy Company, owned and operated by Mrs. Walter C. Worth of Hillside Street, Trucksville Gardens, was begun on a modest scale last Easter when Mrs. Worth, who has been in the candy making business for 18 years, enjoyed conspicuous success in the sale of an experimental lot of Easter eggs.

Encouraged by the large volume of sales and the increasing demand for her candy by many local people, Mrs. Worth decided to go into business for herself. So she set up shop in her kitchen, and started turning out larger and larger quantities of candy to be sold in pound lots.

The candy, which was first sold to churches, other organizations, and from house to house, is now often contracted for over the phone. The industry has been gaining momentum rapidly, and it is now about all Mrs. Worth can do to fill the orders she gets from a sizeable clientele. Although Mr. Worth lends a hand whenever he can, it is a day and night job for his wife. But she loves it... and the people love her candy. So everybody is happy.

Fred Kiefer Bags Grizzly On Trip

Four Cree Indians Guide Party Into Rocky Mountains

found the bear prone by a log, dying. Another shot ended the grizzly's pain and assured Mr. Kiefer of an fine trophy.

The bear was a young one, about three years old, the Indians estimated. Since there were no scales, Mr. Kiefer does not know yet how much it weighed. He has sent the hide to be finished and expects it here soon. Older grizzlies seldom have prime coats and Mr. Kiefer was fortunate in shooting a bear that had a rich, silver-tipped fur.

The killing of the grizzly vindicated Mr. Kiefer for his choice of gun. A heavier gun he took along with him he never used. Two Rocky Mountain goats also fell prey to his marksmanship during the trip. He estimates he saw 74 game animals, including caribou, moose, mule deer, the grizzly and goats.

Members of the party shot blue grouse, ruffed grouse, fool hen and other small game and enjoyed unusual fishing. Mr. Kiefer caught 19 Dolly Varden trout one day in little more than an hour. The average catch was 21 1/2 inches long.

The Ever Present

Mr. Kiefer's guide was Milt Campbell, the grandson of Silver Tip Campbell, a Scotch trader who was one of the first white men in Western Canada. A taciturn, rugged individual of 53, Milt persisted in smoking a treasured pipe which gave off a particularly foul odor. One of Mr. Kiefer's most unpleasant memories of the trip is gasping for air during a toilsome climb at a high altitude and taking in, instead of rarified atmosphere, a lungful of smoke from Milt's ever-present pipe.

Traveling in narrow canyons, the party forded the small tributaries of the Wapiti River. One day they crossed Bull Creek 40 times, another day the party forded Fish Creek 19 times.

On the way in, about 8 miles west of Brown's post, the party passed a homesteader's cabin, the last human habitation from there to the Western slopes of the Rockies. For 20 days the men saw no other people but the members of their own party and heard nothing of the world outside. They made bets on what might be happening outside and then took an afternoon off when they came out to straighten out the wagers.

The trip covered about 7,000 miles, about 6,600 miles of which was represented by the trip from here to Edmonton.
