

LITTLE BUDDY

Steady Business On 'Eerie' Road

something of a dabbler in railroading himself, presented young Fred with a hundred or so feet of small track and a tiny flat car. The youthful railroad magnate and his friends laid out the track and for years amused themselves with riding about on the modest car, which made up in enthusiasm what it lacked in horse power.

But Fred was a friend of the late John Vaughn, who operated a private railroad system in his side yard at his Kingston home. After a ride or two on Mr. Vaughn's steam engine, he figured he'd never be satisfied until he was the possessor of a real honest-to-goodness engine himself. And in 1931 he bought one, along with over a thousand feet of big track, and started the Eerie Railroad Line, insured at $5,000, with central offices on Terrace Street.

The grand opening fell on a day in September, 1932, for the festive occasion Mr. Kirkendall had over a hundred railroad officials, coal company executives, and friends on hand. And since that time a good many other sizeable parties have been entertained on the Eerie's prize passenger car.

The late O. P. Miller, engineer at the time on the crack Black Diamond express of the Lehigh Valley lines, operated "President Roosevelt" on its maiden trip, and one of Mr. Kirkendall's prize possessions is an oil can presented to him by that well-known trainman.

About three years ago Mr. Kirkendall was involved in his railroad's only accident. On that occasion the engine slipped on wet tracks, broke through the back of the car barn, and ran a flat car down the hill right into the pump house behind Shepard's lot. But nothing like that will ever happen again, according to Mr. Kirkendall. The engines are behaving well, the switch lights are all green, and there's a clear track ahead for the Eerie, Incorporated.

and its vicinity began giving ground to the Democrats in 1932 when President Roosevelt defeated Herbert Hoover. Since then the Democratic party has gained consistently here, although its strength has never been adequate to threaten the Republican lead. The reversal of that trend in the last few months may indicate a new swing, or it may be only loyalty to a Luzerne County candidate for Governor.

When Dallas has its Old Home Week next year, to mark the founding of the portland personage and he will unimportant personage and he will undoubtedly be called upon many times while plans are being made to verify dates and other historic data. His unique memory will be a valuable asset to the committee arranging the celebration.

He recalls, for example, when a trip to Wilkes-Barre was a tiring ordeal. He remembers seeing farmers driving their carts at dawn along the rutted Main Street, headed for the city, where they sold their produce. Usually it was dark when they returned home. Mr. Bulford drove his team of oxen to the city once and around Public Square. Sometimes the road through the Luzerne Narrows was so difficult Mr. Bulford and his oxen took to the bed of Toby's Creek, where they could make better time.

Although he was one of the 52 who separated Dallas Borough from Dallas Township, Mr. Bulford now finds himself living again in the township, on a farm which has been in the Bulford family for nearly 100 years.
