

Ex-Soldiers Tell Of Armistice Day

Local Men Recall How They Received News At End Of War

says, the men just sat around, dazed that it had come to an end. Probably they would have stayed that way if an Irishman, Captain Brady, hadn't walked in. "You know, this is a terrible outfit," he said, "here the war is over and nobody's getting drunk."

So the unit moved its quarters to Amiens and proceeded to uphold the honor of the 107th. Mr. Hunt says that, being adjutant, he had to behave himself, up until the time an American general and a French general started to lead the group singing.

Suspected Armistice Near

Albert Stitzer, of Orchard Street, Shavertown, who served with Company B, 145th Battalion, Light Tank Corps, was stationed at the Bayonville front when the war came to an end. The men had suspected that an armistice would be signed for several days before it came about, he says, and the confirmation brought no celebration among them. They were just glad it was over.

He fought with the tank corps at St. Mihiel and in the Argonne Forest. Of 144 six-ton, 2-men tanks which had started at St. Mihiel, only five were fit for action at the end of Argonne. Although the 11th passed quietly for him and his companions, he did celebrate modestly four days later, for on November 15th he took his first bath since September 4th.

Art Brown heard the news of the armistice while he was at work in the Toul section, along the Meuse River. He was medical supply sergeant with a detached unit, 1st Army Medical Convoy Service, and didn't feel much like celebrating because he knew there was a lot of work ahead of him, for the wounded and shell-shocked were still being brought in.

"The hardest part of the armistice," Art said, "was trying to convince the French that the war was really over. They were overjoyed, of course, but some of the older men just shrugged. Because for France, there's always another war just around the corner."

ADVICE

Before we leave the historic 1938 election we should like to say simply "Thanks" to John V. Heffernan. It has not been easy for us, during the last month, to cover and study and understand alone all the cross-currents and complications of the late, lamented campaign. The demands upon this country paper have been unusual and we like to believe that we have, in some measure, answered them well. If we did keep abreast of campaign developments, it is largely due to Mr. Heffernan, who time and again supplied background information for our stories and helped us to score several memorable exclusive election "scoops".

That's all, except that the thing that pleased us most about this election was that, so far as we know, we come out of this election without a solitary new enemy but with a great many fine, new friends.

HODGE-PODGE

Dallas has a 53rd Street . . . If you hear your name coming over some radio don't be alarmed . . . It's probably only that new broadcasting set Add Woolbert has been using to josh the fellows around Main Street . . . Fred Kiefer's predictions on the election were about as close as anyone's . . . There's a question whether the prettiest girls in town are those at the post office, the Tally Ho or at Oliver's garage.

Borough's Vote Was Highest In Years

Arthur Dungey, Dallas Borough tax collector, is of the opinion that Tuesday's voting in Dallas Borough was the heaviest in the history of the borough.

There were 726 votes cast in Dallas Borough. In the Primary Election last Spring there were 540 votes cast in the two borough districts.

Valentine Named Board Solicitor

Prominent Young Attorney Will Succeed Bert Lewis

Attorney Jonathan Valentine was appointed solicitor of Dallas Borough School Board on Wednesday night to succeed Attorney B. B. Lewis, the change to take effect on December 1. The salary will be $150 a year, the same amount Attorney Lewis received. The board awarded a $3,000 insurance policy for five years to W. J. Niemeyer of Dallas. The policy has been held by Penn Mutual Insurance Co., which is represented locally by Stanley Doll.

A letter was received from WPA notifying the board that its request for approval of a plan to construct an addition to Dallas Borough High School had been refused.

The board discussed the frequent scarcity of water at the schools, a condition which has resulted in dismissal of pupils on two days recently. The directors authorized an investigation to learn the cost of drilling a well and constructing a private water system.

Death Ends Career Of Samuel C. Chase

Called 'Best Loved Citizen Of This Region' By Miss Dorrance

By MISS FRANCES DORRANCE

The sudden death of Samuel C. Chase on Thursday evening, November 3rd, brought to a close a life of steadfast service which had won the affection of many friends and the devotion of a wide community.

In every walk in life, all who knew him were his friends; the guards at the County Prison, where as board member he gave attention to any detail of that responsibility; the former employees of the old Coal Exchange Building; the management of the Westmoreland Club, of which he was president; the prominent business and professional men and women of the county, with whom he was constantly associated, all recognized the integrity of his purpose and appreciated the cheery, kindly thoughtfulness which efficiently accomplished its aims.

To the community's wide interests and needs he gave tirelessly of strength and time in a passionate desire to be of service.

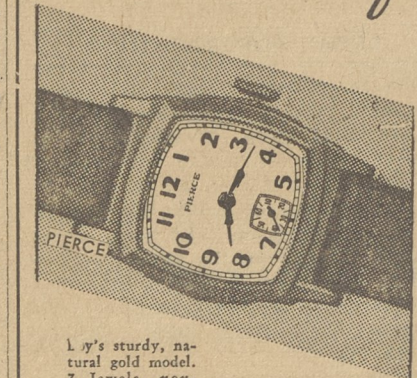

The persistence of his interest has been manifested in his twenty-five years as secretary of the Wyoming Historical and Geological Society, in which his determination to promote its well-being was a prime stimulus to the work.

His connection with the Chamber of Commerce since its beginning and his offices as director since 1932, assistant treasurer since 1936 are an evidence of public trust.

The development of the contentment and happiness of the old men in the Sutton Home was another deep interest, as was also the promotion of Hollenback Park. As manager and trustee of the Hollenback Estate, he made every effort to carry out this last public plan of John Welles Hollenback to the fullest extent. Perhaps it was to the Welfare Federation as the coordinating force in the Community's social service that he gave the most thought and it seems fitting that his last evening was spent in planning for its advance.

To his church, the First Presbyterian of Wilkes-Barre, he gave unflinching service as deacon, and the forth-

1. It's sturdy, natural gold model.
2. Jewels, non-magnetic. Convenient terms arranged.

SOME watches contain one part from one manufacturer, another part from an entirely different source. They are "assembled."

Pierce Watches are built on an entirely different principle. Every Watch contains parts especially designed for it. All parts are then manufactured and assembled by one group of craftsmen working under one roof under the watchful eye of one central management, the way fine cars are made. . . . Among moderately priced timepieces, you cannot do better than buy a Pierce.

right devotion of his personal life proved his christianity.

One of the clearest pictures his friends have is of his delight in his garden and his home, shared with his sister, Miss Frances Chase, where his whimsical spirit was at its brightest, and where his ingenuity in meeting problems of country life had free play.

His was the modesty and simplicity of the truly great character, which reaching out to influence all for good has no realization of its own greatness. He was beyond doubt, the best and most loved citizen of this region.
