BURGESS SMITH PENS POETIC GEM IN HONOR OF WILCOX'S BIRTHDAY

PORKER CREATES FUSS ON TOWN'S MAIN STEM AS IT EVADES CAPTORS

A little black pig, which ran wild on Lake Street Sunday afternoon, gave a group of townfolk a merry chase.

Dean Ide, "Bud" LeGrand, Bill Templin and Andrew Lumley were the first to test their agility and wind against the agile little porker. They had it cornered when Chet Tutak and Arthur Hauck appeared and gave valuable assistance.

When the little pig had been captured, Mr. Hauck explained it was his and carried it off.

Declamation Is Feature Of Surprise Party For Morgan

CAREER REVIEWED

Forsaking his burdensome executive duties for the nonce, Burgess Herbert A. Smith of Dallas courted the poetic muse last week and composed an epic poem which he read, with gestures, on Friday night at a surprise party for Councilman Morgan Wilcox.

It was Mr. Wilcox's birthday and to help him observe it Mr. and Mrs. Peter D. Clark, Mr. and Mrs. Clyde Lapp, Mr. and Mrs. James Ayre, Mr. and Mrs. George Ayre and Mr. and Mrs. Smith surprised the jovial councilman at his home and staged a delightful party in his honor.

Burgess Smith's unique composition, read as a climax of the affair, was easily the hit of the evening. A life-long friend of Mr. Wilcox, the Burgess drew freely upon his knowledge of the guest of honor's career, particularly that part relating to his family's fondness for fast horses. Lest the poem be lost to posterity, The Post herewith publishes it:

In days gone by a boy was born
To the Wilcox family, who owned a barn
Under the South Street Bridge, by darn.

The Wilcox's were horsey hellions,
They talked of their sires and dams and stallions,
Although they seldom won a race,
They still kept on with a smiling face.

The boy grew up with the Wilcox clan
Who tried to make him a horse fan.
Said his Uncle Jim, "You can be a contender
For ownership to a horse like Defender."

But Morg replied to his Uncle Jim,
"My chances here are mighty slim,
There's a crowd of Wilcox's, all broken and sound,
And not enough horses to go around."

So Morg, he went to Syracuse,
And of his time he made good use.
He played football, mid shouts and yells,
And told Uncle Jim to go to H—.

So Morg, he left the horsey class,
He studied hard, and finally passed.
He shunned such things as a horsey life
And took unto himself a wife.

Morg came to Dallas one glorious fall
And bought himself "Old Sunset Hall".
He prospered, and lived a happy life
With comfort galore and not a strife.

He then was made a City Boss
And ran the town without a loss
And ever since, he has lived in the sticks,
And swapped tall lies with all the hicks.

I see Morg's face is turning red
And more of this may turn his head,
So now my story must quickly close,
For I expect a sock on the nose.
