SHAVERTOWN — MT. GREENWOOD — TRUCKSVILLE

Drive For New Members Is Launched
By Shavertown Volunteer Fire Co.

Chairman Prater Points
To Unselfish Service
Firemen Give Community

Volunteer fire-fighters from Shavertown Fire Co. launched their annual drive for new members this week under the leadership of A. George Prater. Membership of the company has been divided into districts and workers will make a house-to-house canvas to enlist new members. The first reports will be made next Monday night at a meeting at the hose house.

In announcing the drive, Chairman Prater emphasized that property owners and renters in the township are not taxed for fire protection. "Under the circumstances," he said, "I think our neighbors will be prompt to respond to our campaign for memberships, as evidence of their appreciation for the protection the volunteers provide to homes in the Shavertown district."

The firemen have had an especially successful year and those who join, besides contributing to a worthy civic group, will be affiliating themselves with an organization which has a high reputation for its enjoyable social affairs.

After the drive is over, all new members will be invited to an "open house" at the firemen's hall.

Aunt Tillie Trask, who has never allowed a man in her house, is Elsie Ayre. Althea May is the maid, who is anxious to be married. Lewis Evans and Robert Tryon add humor to the play by creating scenes which will keep the audience laughing. The plot is complicated by Allen Haughwout and Eleanor Bartells, one a Chinaman, the other, a detective. Especially loveable is Pamela Maran, who in real life is Marian Jones, and Lizzie, played by Janet Grosert, is a scream. More humor is added by Margery James, an efficient chiropractor, and Eleanor Belford, another "Aunt Tillie". Warren Meacham, a bachelor, enjoys getting other people married but finds himself involved in matrimony before the play ends.

five, or six decks. On most newspapers today the tendency has been to limit the heads over all but unusually important stories to four decks at most.

Recent tests indicate that most newspaper readers read no more than the first two decks of a head and that, therefore, any more than two decks is superfluous. One editor claims that surveys made by him suggest that only one reader in ten reads more than the first deck of a multiple-deck head.

With that thought in mind, The Post has worked out a "style-sheet" with many effective two-deck heads that not only afford adequate display for all but unusually important stories but which also simplify the writing, setting and reading of heads.

If you will look at the headlines in this issue you will see that the top lines on the larger heads begin flush at the left. That is the natural place for the eye to begin reading a line. Instead of sticking in short dashes between the decks, more obstacles for the eye to hurdle, we have abandoned the dashes and used only white space to separate the decks. As a result, there are more white patches on the page—and it is in the A. B. C.'s of typography that white space is pleasing to the eye.

It must be obvious that we are proud of the changes we have begun this week. That feeling is qualified, however, by a realization that The Post is not yet everything we expect it to
