Miss Knorr's poem follows: Beside the door of a neighbor's home

Grows a common weed with flowery dome; It's out of place in that cool green spot,— Could hold its own in the pasture lot.

Through wind and storm and summer heat That weed still stands,—knows no defeat; What stays the hand of gardener trained To mow and trim, keep weeds restrained?

We ponder much at its growing there.

A Higher Hand must tend and care. Could mortals bowed with ills and woe Lift up their heads and courage show?

To face Life's Autumn, and be glad To trust His care that all will be clad.

Only a sullen, erect, unbowed, Nature will fashion her Winter shroud.
