is a philosopher, inhabiting a realm known best for its dazzling display of air castles.

At least this was the case in the days when a man could go out and locate a split rail fence without packing along a week's supply of food. We weren't aware how serious the situation had become until we began our own autumn search for a rail fence. Week-end after week-end we plodded over wire-enclosed fields, only to see more gleaming wire fences stretching endlessly ahead. We were on the verge of panic when, last Sunday, somewhere to-hell-and-gone beyond Center Hill Road, we found it—a genuine, split rail fence.

We suppose this will seem like quite a fuss to make over split rail fence. People will say that we might better be defending peace or honor or democracy. Our antagonism toward the wire fence will, no doubt, seem elfin beside such indisputably serious problems as, say, the European War. Maybe it is. But we think if somebody had got Chamberlain, Daladier, Hitler and Stalin together on a split rail fence last August there wouldn't be any European War.
