Carverton Unit Defends Itself

Answers Charges Made By Rival APL Branch

tered in June, 1936, and denies that it was placed under any restrictions as to its meeting place. The first meetings were held in the Carverton section, in Sutton's hall, until the weather became too cold. It was decided then to seek permission to meet in the old Bunker Hill school, but that structure was being used as a church and the League met instead in Trucksville grade school until it burned. After that the members assembled in the basement of the Frank Carver home on Carverton Road but the quarters were too small.

Mr. Lahr claims that Branch 22 filed a complaint when his unit began meeting in Trucksville but an official of the State League ruled that there was nothing to bar Branch 28 from meeting in Trucksville. The controversy over jurisdiction was revived about 15 months ago and has been growing since.

"We have lived up to the organization and by-laws of our organization," the statement concludes, "and will operate and transact business under the name of Branch No. 28, American Progressive League, Inc., as advised by our attorneys. We still have our charter and seal, which our members paid for. We challenge any member or members of the executive board to an open debate in any public building, because we feel we can show where the parent organization has erred. We shall appoint some of our members to meet them and ask all delegates and the public to attend so they can hear both sides."
