Cow Testing Association and two local dairies were among the leaders in the Wyoming County Association. Col. Dorrance Reynolds, Hillside Farms of Trucksville, C. W. Space of Dallas and Mrs. Frank Martz of Dallas received high ranking in the one association and Arthur Gay and H. B. Schooley, both of Dallas R. D., had enviable records in the other. The report of home economics work was made by Miss E. Nitzkowski.

decided to secede and on April 21, 1879, Dallas Borough was chartered by the court and the town was split. An ironic fact is that Mr. Bulford, who was a leader in the movement to withdraw from the township, later moved out of the borough and back into the township.

The names of the Rices, the Shavers, the Rymans, the Irvings and the Kunkles punctuate Mr. Bulford's reminiscences of old Dallas.

It was John J. Ryman, according to Mr. Bulford, who founded the first store in Dallas, on the property now owned by C. W. Space. Mr. Ryman, who once built a private telephone line from Wilkes-Barre, later had a store near where the Acme Store stands today. Later the establishment was bought by a Mr. Stevens.

Sawmills Lined Creek
The chief industry in Mr. Bulford's youth was lumbering and he recalls that the creek was lined with sawmills in those days. Shaver and Ryman operated one of the largest, near Fernbrook. They owned between 500 and 600 acres of timber and burned slabs to generate steam for the mill. Their first mill burned down. The second was torn down after it had outlived its usefulness.

The sawmill at Kunkle was known as "The Greenwood", because of the quantity of hemlocks and coniferous trees there. A tannery was erected not far from the mill, a little beyond where Isaac's store is today.

Captain Rice also operated a sawmill, along the creek on Mill Street, behind the present Acme Store. Beside Captain Rice's mill was the only swimming pool handy to Dallas youngsters. Albert Lewis ran a sawmill on Lake Street, near where Himmler Theatre stands today.

Two of the earliest stores were owned by Ira Shaver and James Graham. Mr. Graham's store was on the site of Frantz's store. The first shoe shop was on Huntsville Street, half-way between Main Street and the school. Originally owned by Abe Huey, it was later sold to a Mr. Bealer.

The first physician Mr. Bulford remembers was Dr. Spencer, who lived in the present residence of C. A. Frantz. Later Dr. J. J. Laing came here.

Mail service was twice a week, and it was considered quite a mark of progress when delivery was improved to three times a week.

For years worship was held in homes. The first real church was in what is now known as Sunset Hall, at Center Hill and Lake Street. There were two doors, Mr. Bulford recalls. The women entered one, the men the other. Later, the church became a broom factory, and a church was built on the site of the present Dallas Methodist Church.

In Mr. Bulford's opinion, Harry Harris's home is the oldest in Dallas.

Highlights From The Reports At The 25th Annual Meeting

A litter of 12 pure-bred Berkshire pigs at the W. H. Conyngham Orchard Knob Farm consumed 7,063 pounds in 180 days and grew into more than a ton of live pork. At the end of the test-period of 180 days they weighed 2,340 pounds, which meant that they had eaten 3.15 pounds of feed for each pound they gained.

Luzerne County isn't usually associated with wool growing, but 4,067 pounds were sold here last year, at 29 cents a pound. Eighteen growers pooled their wool

The herds of Col. Dorrance Reynolds of Dallas Township topped the producers in the Columbia-Luzerne Cow Testing Association again last year. Colonel Reynolds' herd, which averaged over 37 cows, had an average milk production of 9,132 pounds.

J. D. Hutchison, county agent, and J. S. Hummer, assistant agent, travelled 26,531 miles, or more than once around the world at the equator, during the last year. They made 894 farm visits.

Some 4,655 persons turned up for the meetings conducted throughout the year by Miss E. Nitzkowski, home economics extension representative. They learned to cane chairs, darn stockings, make clothes, plan menus, test textile and study something called "buymanship."

Nearly 24,000 copies of circular letters were mailed by the Farm Bureau in the last year. Scarcely a day passes without a request for some practical assistance from Miss Nitzkowski's home economics department. For instance, under Home Management alone, Miss Nitzkowski lists 72 requests for information about kitchen equipment, 161 requests for information about home furnishings, 74 about household organization and 115 about furniture care and repair.

The work of the Farm Bureau isn't confined always to farming. In recent years it has been called upon frequently for advice in developing turf. Last year it assisted a committee from Irem Country Club in fertilizing and cultivating its links.

Last year Luzerne County cattle received their triennial test and once again the county became an accredited area with over 99 1/2 per cent of its cattle free of tuberculosis.

Rives' La Jolla column back in August, 1938. "When I met Rives," Emmons writes, "I told him I wanted to be a writer, as he was, and he remembered this, and offered me a job when he got his paper here in Princess Anne. I am his printer's devil, which I think is the right place for one to start out in the newspaper world."

Emmons Blake's first "Footnotes" in The Post appears today on Page 3. We know you'll like it as much as we did.

One of our scouts with a scientific bent has been spending his spare time this winter completing a pretty accurate survey of the different ways to slip on the ice. He says there are really only three basic falls: The Pile Driver or Teeth Loosener; The Discus Throw, and The Godoy Crouch. The Pile Driver is the most common, but No. 2, The Discus Throw, is the most graceful to observe.

In The Pile Driver both legs leave the ground simultaneously, toes up, heels down, and describe an arc which lowers the upper part of the body into violent contact with the sidewalk. This style is frequently accompanied by one or two words expressing surprise or pain, their character depending, to a great extent, upon who happens to be within listening distance. A variation is No. 1A, which is achieved when the head jerks backward suddenly and strikes the pavement with a thud. This kind of a fall happens mostly on slight grades.

No. 2, The Discus Throw, takes practice. In it, the subject raises his left leg slightly, crooking the knee to make a right angle. The right arm shoots suddenly backward and downward, and the left goes up stiffly to maintain balance. This leaves the subject teetering on the ball of the right foot. If he is agile, he regains his balance, picks up his packages and goes on. If he is not, he moves into The Pile Driver style, and drops like a log.

The Godoy Crouch is named in honor of the trailing arbutus from Chile and is similar to the position Ambling Arturo assumed in the fourteenth round of his fight with Mr. Joseph Lewis. In this one, when the subject feels himself sliding, he shoves his hands against the sidewalk, sometimes slipping to one knee, and looks very much like a sprinter waiting for the gun. This is the least damaging of all.

Our man intended to extend his research, but on Monday, in the middle of one of his experiments, he stepped onto a strip of wet ice and tumbled down a ten-foot bank. It ended his study for the time being.

Walking along the street recently, a friend of ours saw approaching a young man whose uniform was apparently out of some Victor Herbert operetta. As the smartly-dressed young fellow drew near he clicked his heels, bowed stiffly from the waist and thrust something toward our friend.

"We'd like to have you try a stick of our chewing gum," he said, stiffly. Our friend accepted the gum, and searched for some way to indicate, not only his thanks, but his appreciation for the smart appearance the young man made, standing there like the statue of a drum major.

"Do you do this all the time?" our friend asked. The stiffness disappeared. The boy's shoulders sagged. "Yeah," he complained, shooting his words out of the corner of his mouth. "I gotta do this the whole damn day."
