sion. It was the tiny incident of the upset glass.

Somehow, in an eloquent movement of her left hand, Miss Colt tipped over an empty glass. We've known sheer agony in such moments. When we upset a glass it frequently spoils our evening because invariably, when we attempt to retrieve the glass we hit something with our elbow, drop a fork on the floor and finally pull the tablecloth off, bringing the dishes crashing upon our neck. At least it seems that way.

Maybe Miss Colt showed the slightest trace of a promise of a frown, but nothing more. She righted the glass quickly, apparently by some magic, never interrupting her conversation, her poise or her charm. It was a lovely thing to watch, and it was done so swiftly we almost missed it. It was good manners, but more than that it was the mind of a born actress, responding to a minor emergency which threatened the attention of her audience. It was a beautiful thing to see. It was pure Barrymore.

It will probably relieve Mr. A. S. Culbert to know that we have solved the mystery of the cryptic telegram which he received and once relayed to us about a month ago. A solitary, dangling "What?" at the end of a seemingly meaningless string of words had us both on the ropes for a while. That telegram turned out to be an invitation to week-end with Warren and Gerry Williams in Philadelphia. They were one word under the limit, they explained, so they just tacked on a "what?" Last week-end we accepted the invitation and it turned out to be a grand reunion.

Since he shook the coal dust from his heels about seven years ago, Warren, whose nickname, Duke, still clings to him, has been accumulating journalistic background in the New York, Indianapolis, Chicago and Philadelphia bureaus of the Associated Press. When we kept our rendezvous with them in a down-town hotel it was the first time we had seen each other in four or five years. Both Warren and your Postscripter confessed to a need for sleep and were agreeing earnestly to get to bed early when Gerry rebelled, with several caustic remarks concerning the Saturday night manners of newspapermen. We compromised finally, though. Gerry consented to return to the apartment, after browbeating us into a promise to sit up, for a little while, anyway, to talk.

By the time we had draped ourselves over the Williams' best furniture a great many things were waiting to be told. Warren had something complimentary to relate about "Flap" Ward, another Record reporter now with the AP, and that would remind us to counter with a new yarn about John Heffernan. The words piled up and the hour hand kept slipping around. Once Gerry lured us away from the subject by reading some poetry and another time she cleverly manipulated us into a debate over Grant Wood's "Washington and Parson Weems" but each time, with unquenchable determination, we fought our way back to shop talk.

It was 5 a. m., we suppose, when, in the midst of the Yankee-Pennamite War (we had worked our way back that far) we glanced over at the love seat and discovered that the indomitable Gerry had fallen sound asleep.

There was nothing to do but awaken her and coax her to scramble some eggs, in the hope that, seeing our obvious relish for her cookery, she would forgive us.

The reunion in Philadelphia was not the only loose end which was tied last week-end. Warren and Gerry had showed us a postcard lately received from Jim Jennings who, having fled the political cauldron at Harrisburg, was vacationing in Miami. When we reached home there was a number to call, and when we rang it, it was Jim Jennings, home from Miami. That seemed to conclude the late returns on most of our foot-loose friends. But there was one more item. Jim had a message for us from another outpost. He had brought home greetings from Joe and Jane Elicker, who left Dallas just before the New Year for Nassau in the British West Indies.
