Something New In Croquettes

WHAT has a thin and crispy crust on the outside, yet is soft as melted cheese within? No, this is not a riddle, it's merely a description of the new kind of croquettes that are pictured above.

Made with a teasingly flavored cheese sauce and sliced hard-cooked egg, these croquettes were fried in one of the new five-speed well cookers in a modern electric range. Such cookers are well adapted for deep-fat frying, since among others, they are equipped with a high speed switch which heats the fat quickly to frying temperature, and also a second, slightly lower speed which is designed especially to maintain frying temperatures. Then, since they are set deep-down into the surface of the range, these electric deep well cookers effectively safeguard against the usual hazards of deep-fat frying—an upset fat kettle and spattering grease. A temperature of 390° F. gave these croquettes their very thin crisp brown crust and heated the mixture inside just enough so that the cheese became meltingly soft.

The croquette mixture, however, must be thoroughly chilled to make shaping possible. And if, in addition, the hands are first rubbed with a little melted butter the croquettes can be molded without a bit of trouble.

Melting Cheese Croquettes (8 servings)

- 4 tablespoons butter
- 4 tablespoons flour
- 1 cup top milk or cream
- 1/2 cup strong cheese (grated)
- 1 teaspoon parsley (chopped)
- 1/2 teaspoon onion (grated)
- 1/2 teaspoon salt
- Few grains pepper
- 4 hard-cooked eggs (cut fine)
- Flour
- 1 egg plus 1 tablespoon water
- Dry bread crumbs

Melt butter in saucepan on electric surface unit over medium heat. Blend with flour to make a smooth paste. Add milk or cream and cook, stirring constantly, until smooth and thickened. Add cheese and stir until melted. Remove from heat. Stir in chopped parsley, onion, salt and pepper. Fold in chopped eggs and place mixture in refrigerator to chill. Shape into croquettes, roll, dip in flour, then egg and finally coat well with crumbs. Melt about 3 pounds of fat in deep well cooker over a high heat. Heat to 390° F. Turn cooker to lowest heat that will maintain this temperature. Fry croquettes for 1 1/2 minutes or until brown. Drain on absorbent paper,
