testing the water, the goose-pimples incident upon emergence from the tub, the hasty towelling and the shivering dive under the covers—all Americana, and part of our rightful heritage.

The Saturday Night Bath ranks with the Mother-in-Law and the Absent-Minded-Professor as a sure-fire laugh-getter; but I sometimes wonder how many of us would pass up the daily shower and tub if we had to roll the makings into the kitchen, shoo out the children and neighbors, heat the water on the stove, and worst of all empty the tub after the ablutions. It took a hefty man to empty a tub single-handed, but the tub could be bailed out until the water reached a reasonable level. This probably accounted for the customary low-tide. What the bather lacked in quantity he made up for in vigor of execution and attention to detail. The end result was apt to be redolent of yellow soap and sticky as to hair, but the boost to the self-respect and sense of well-being was terrific.

With no central heating in these older houses, and the bedrooms shut off from the rest of the house during the daytime, going to bed after the S. N. B. was a matter requiring gerts, a breaking of the ice on a grand scale. The mothers of the rising generation, realizing the hardship, softened the blow by wrapping a soapstone or a sizzling brick in layers of newspaper and putting it to bed in about the spot where little Johnny's rear elevation would ultimately come to rest. Little Johnny, upon diving under the covers, gave the soapstone a push to the foot of the bed, leaving a delightfully hot spot to lie upon and providing a radiant surface for the feet. This forestalled waking up some time during the night with the feet tied around the neck in a double-bow knot, and the bottom of the bed an icy and unexplored waste of sub-zero sheet.

Another method of tempering the wind to the shorn lamb was to use light-weight blankets instead of sheets. Judging from recent mail-order catalogues, a good many millions of the backbone of our country still go for flannelette night-gowns and blanket sheets, preferring warmth to glamour. In fact, flannel pajamas seem to have come out of the country and gone to bed in the city with a fine disregard for steam-heat. Red wool unmentionables are making a strong comeback under ski pants, and long wool socks of every conceivable hue are part of every school-girl's wardrobe.

With modern emphasis upon sanitation and comfort and unlimited hot water, as exemplified by the innermost shrine of the Great American Home, the bathroom, it is always amusing to watch the reaction of people who are moving out into the country for the summer to do a little roughing-it. When I consider the rent I once paid for a cottage on Cape Cod, a cottage of three rooms with a stubborn pump in the kitchen sink and a very inferior chemical arrangement in a little room at the rear, I marvel at the inconveniences that people are willing to put up with. We leave our comfortable homes at the slightest excuse and let ourselves in for the most astonishing array of makeshifts.

I have some friends in town who strain at the leash until they can move out to their windswept hill for the summer. They exchange

Platt Bennett of Cooklyn Hill, Huntsville, and Laning Harvey, Jr., son of Senator and Mrs. Laning Harvey of Bear Creek. Miss Bennett was graduated from Greenwood School and Bryn Mawr College. ease of living—with plenty of hot water—for an oilstove and a fireplace and a dormitory bedroom with the sheep separated from the goats by a sagging line of army blankets, a pump two blocks away down a steep hill, and a modest little Chic Sale. They have themselves a perfectly swell time. One day last spring they drove out that way in a severe rainstorm to gaze longingly from the hill and dream of summer, and as the car topped the last rise they noticed that the Chic Sale seemed to be riding the waves at a rakish angle. As the family came closer and closer the collapse became more and more apparent. I believe that Chic Sale, in his immortal volume, recommends anchoring such structures firmly to an upright, sunk several feet in the ground, as an insurance against Halloween's revelry and heavy Northeasters.

It's all a matter of relativity. If you are traveling through the Arctic, pemmican and a frozen fish and a weatherproof Igloo may represent the height of luxury. When you get that yen to get-away-from-it-all in the summer time, you are willing to burn a kerosene lamp and take a bath in a quart cup, paying heavy for the privilege and exchanging ease for Ozone.

Thirty Churches Minister To Religious, Social And Cultural Needs Of Community

As in most rural and suburban areas, churches in the Back Mountain section are not only the religious center but also the social center of community activity. Over 4,000 church members and as many Sunday School members attend services in the 30 or more odd churches of the area every Sunday. At Epworth League meetings, Bible Classes, choir practice, W. C. T. U., Ladies' Aid and official board meetings, members gather in their churches throughout the week for recreation and intellectual stimulation.
