

Hunters Warned Against Use Of Souvenir Rifles

The Pennsylvania Game Commission today issued a warning to sportsmen and others to beware of souvenir guns brought back from the war theatres.

The American serviceman is inherently a souvenir collector. This tendency, however, is very apt to prove a disastrous boomerang in many cases if returning soldiers and sailors follow through on what is only a natural inclination and have their captured Japanese and German military rifle converted into sporting firearms chambered for American-made ammunition, the Commission asserts.

This is particularly true with the Japanese Arisaka rifle. Japanese arms are not made under the careful manufacturing controls which govern American, British and German manufacture. Some of them might stand conversion to sporting loads, but they are few and far between among the vast numbers of Arisakas of wartime manufacture, which are made of poor metal with inferior workmanship and sloppy fitting.

The best place for a captured Arisaka is on the wall or in the gunrack as a souvenir. That is the advice of all competent gunsmiths, many of whom consider this rifle more dangerous to the shooter than Damascus barrels on a shotgun.

The warning also holds good for guns picked up in the European theater of war. Many soldiers have walked into abandoned munition factories in Germany and helped themselves to what small arms they found. They have no way of knowing whether these guns have ever passed final inspection, whether they've been proof-fired or whether they are "rejects" due to faulty material, workmanship or mechanism.

The average sportsman has no assurance that these abandoned guns do not have a few parts missing. He is generally satisfied if the gun seems to function properly in "dry" (unloaded) shoot-

LAST CALL TO PATRIOTS!

NEVER before in their history have the American people shown their patriotism as they did in the 7 great War Loan Drives.

Now the war is over. And the question might possibly come to your mind: "Why a Victory Loan?" Well, we all want a sound, prosperous country. We want to build a sound future. Reconversion costs money. We are getting our men into ships and trains and bringing them home, and that costs money. We are nursing and healing our over 300,000 wounded, and that will take money for many months to come.

Remember, this is your last chance to help your country by investing in extra bonds.* The bonds you've bought and the Victory Bonds you buy today, are your savings, your bulwark, a nest egg that you can turn into cash in any time of need. And they are the best insurance you can have that America will be a strong and prosperous nation.
