toward Baltimore, the little horses rocked sedately on the back seat, through a pair of round little eyes fringed with up-curved eyelashes.

As the car made its steady way dipping and swaying with each change of pace and shift of gear.

The sailor who thumbed a ride just south of Petersburg had been fortifying himself against the weather. It was chilly, it was growing dusky, and a fine drizzle was misting the windshield. The passenger stretched his legs and relaxed. Then, under the influence of the heater, the soothing motion, and the gathering darkness, he became garrulous. Shifting in the seat and draping his arm along the back, he held forth on the joys of homecoming. He was going to give the Little Woman a real treat this time. No more wandering, no more straying from the straight and narrow. He was on the wagon (hic) and he meant to stay there. In the meantime a little nip from the brown bottle wouldn't hurt anything. Weather like this wasn't fitten for man or beast, and the best and kindest thing to do with it was to forget it in a rosy haze.

Thus persuaded, he uncorked the bottle and took a prolonged swig. Wiping his mouth on the back of his hand, he offered the driver the courtesy of the bottle, still half full. The driver declined on the grounds that driving and drinking did not mix.

At this point a large truck stopped dead in the left-hand high speed lane of traffic. A brisk maneuver brought the car into the right hand lane just in front of a jeep whose driver cursed bitterly, consigned all lady drivers to a super-heated climate, and applied smoking brakes.

The sailor passed a shaking hand across his brow, retrieved his bottle from the floor, and resumed the conversation. The blue horses, galloping fiercely on the back seat under the influence of the sudden swerve and acceleration, caught his glazing eye. The sailor froze in his tracks, brown bottle half way to his lips. He fumbled for words. "Lady," he croaked thickly, "whotcha got in that back seat?" "Not a thing," responded the driver blithely, "you must be tight. Probably you're seeing things."

"Lady," abjectly, "I coulda swore I saw something moving back there, something that looked at me and winked. Maybe I got'em again."

His voice trailed off into an unhappy mumble, and he stared fixedly at the windshield.

The car passed under a street light on the edge of a small town. The sailor stole a haunted look at the back seat. Three little blue horses rocked away in perfect rhythm, up and down, up and down, three pairs of glittering eyes surveyed the cringing passenger in the front seat.

The sailor gave a strangled moan, and hoarse words burst from him.

"Lady, you lemme outa here. First place I don't want to get my neck broke on account of no blank lady drivers, and next place them things on the back seat look like they bite. Lemme outa here, I say."

The driver drew up in front of a convenient hamburger stand. The sailor, wrenching open the door, dived into the night, and hotfooted it in the direction of warmth and more beer and fewer horses. He turned up the collar of his pea-coat as he ran. The brown bottle glugged itself empty in the gutter. The driver slammed the door, patted three little blue rocking horses on three painted noses, and picked up speed.

"Tain't a fitten night for man nor beast," she reflected philosophically.

Bumper Turkey Crop For Holiday Trade

Not only were there plenty of Pennsylvania turkeys for Christmas but the supply is ample to provide for the rapidly developing family custom of buying another or several turkeys for use in the later winter months, the State Department of Agriculture has announced.

Turkey growers of the State—sensing the increasing "before and after holiday" demand created in pre-war years by hotels and restaurants in featuring the big birds on the menus from September through spring and even summer months—are prepared to meet consumer requests with the biggest turkey crop in the history of the State. Production this year totals 1,670,000 birds, 30 per cent higher than 1944 and the fourth consecutive year the Pennsylvania crop passed the million mark.

Walter Roberts, Teacher, Buried

Lake Principal Had Retired November 1

The funeral of Walter E. Roberts, 67, retired principal of Lake Township School, was held yesterday afternoon from his home in West Pittston. Mr. Roberts passed away Sunday afternoon at 4:30 at his home following a lingering illness.

Born in Pikes Creek, October 3, 1879, he was the son of the late Russell and Nettie Roberts. He graduated in 1902 from Stroudsburg State Teachers' College and taught school for many years. Before coming to Lake Township nine years ago he had been supervising principal at Hughestown and West Wyoming Schools.

Lake Township saw notable progress during his tenure of office, the most significant improvement being the addition of classes in vocational training. In addition to his duties as principal, Mr. Roberts also taught bookkeeping.

He was a member of the West Pittston Methodist Church and belonged to Bruce Rickett's Camp, Sons of Veterans, Fairmount Springs.

Because of failing health he did not resume his duties at Lake Township this fall and resigned on November 1. He was succeeded by George W. Taylor.

He leaves his wife, the former Bertha Ruggles, Pikes Creek, and three sons, Willard and Russell both of Brookline, Pa. and Walter, Houston, Texas.

Rev. Roy T. Henwood was officiating clergyman and interment was in the Maple Grove Cemetery, Pikes Creek.

Elevated Parks

The Department of Forests and Waters has parks and playgrounds at more than 2,000 feet above sea level.

Many farmers raised turkeys in numbers for the first this year, with the result that the State ranks eighth in the Nation and first east of the Mississippi River, in the number produced. California leads with 4,942,000 of the national record total of slightly more than 44 million birds.

From all of us to all of you, a very happy and prosperous New Year.
