

Former Lehman Principal Will Head Placement Service At Wilkes College

CLARENCE BOSTON

PAUL R. MEHM

Establishment of a career library at Wilkes College, the first of its kind to be introduced on a Northeastern Pennsylvania college campus and the inauguration of the Wilkes College Placement Service to further supplement the institution's program of assisting students and graduates in the selection of their life's work, will await collegians returning for Fall semester classes, Dr. Eugene S. Farley, president announced this week.

Dr. Farley also announced the appointment of Clarence S. Boston, former Lehman High School principal, from assistant director of the Wilkes College guidance center to head the placement service.

Paul R. Mehm, who is a member of the Wilkes College faculty, will direct the career library project.

The latter program is unique on college campuses in Northeastern Pennsylvania and centers around a separate library on the Wilkes College campus in which has been assembled a complete coverage of careers which are open to college graduates and students throughout the world.

Mr. Mehm has secured career reports from industrial and professional centers here and abroad, which consist of detailed information on careers which go to make up business enterprises in the United States, European, Canadian and South American countries.

Functioning of the placement service at Wilkes College has been made possible through contributions of the Seligman J. Strauss Lodge of B'nai B'rith which is sponsoring the office, Dr. Farley explained.

The purpose of the placement service is to assist students and graduates to secure suitable positions. Students at Wilkes College will be registered and prospective employers will have access to their records when selecting personnel.
