Why goats prefer New, Smaller-Size Pellets

New Beacon Goat Ration is more economical for you, too

For some time, the Beacon Milling Company has believed that goats would prefer a smaller size pellet. We thought also that it would have other advantages in feeding and economy. So—we tested the small pellet on numerous goat farms . . . and found that without exception, goats preferred it.

1. The new Beacon Goat Ration with smaller size pellets does not separate nearly as much from the rest of the ration.
2. The entire ration is eaten. Even the "fussy" goat does not leave the new Beacon Pellets.
3. You can feed larger amounts of feed.
4. Beacon's new Goat Ration is more economical to use.

Last week a Kingston car went over MacDougall's embankment while this week two out-of-town cars collided at the Lake Hill intersection. Fortunately damages were to the cars and not the occupants both times. The consensus of opinion states that speeding was the cause both times. What can we local people do to cope with it? Be careful.

Again said correspondent thanks Rosemary Kozak for a job well done while the Austins were on their trip up the Gattineau River in Quebec, Canada where some afternoons of excellent fishing were well forgotten by the "Mrs." who held "school" at the request of five twelve year olds or thereabouts who wanted to learn to write their names. You see these youngsters had never been to school and just couldn't believe some youngsters here dreaded the thoughts that vacation was at a close; for their fondest and most cherished dream was to be able to read, write, and be with other children.
