RADIO NEWS

More On FM Antenna

Automobiles may be a boon and blessing in one form but they sure can cause a lot of noise in an FM receiver. This ignition noise can ruin the reception in some localities but be not dismayed, the situation is not hopeless. Sometimes moving the antenna will remedy the situation, sometimes it may take another type of lead-in wire, other times it may require a shield on the underside of the antenna. For those who appreciate the fidelity of the FM receiver, all of these things are worth trying. We will be glad to lend our experience and help.

AM Radio

During the past week, we have had a couple of experiences that should be worth a thought or two. A certain party has a well known and certainly one of the better makes of radio. A hum developed in this set in the past 6 or so weeks. The hum was not bothersome so nothing was done about it, until this week when a filter condenser went out throwing a short circuit on the power transformer and a heavy duty resistor; smoke and sparks came from the set. In this case a five dollar repair job soon enough would have saved him ten dollars. MORAL, "a little maintenance now and then can save time and money later." In another case, a man called us with a small noise complaint, we found a shorted resistor. Repair bill one dollar, money saved—10 dollars.

Record Players

Yes, we can help you there, too; be something on that next week.
