great vigor. Norma had gotten into the spirit of the thing and was around telling people how "her Mother" did this and how "her Mother" said this and that. Bob visited the punch bowl once too often and had fallen sound asleep on a chair in the library. After the last of the guests had departed Mother and Aunt Stella sat on the loveseat and agreed with each other that except for a few minor details it had been a truly beautiful party. As we started upstairs Mother said, "Phyllis, be sure to say goodnight to your father; he may not be here in the morning."

The next morning we left Providence and drove down to South County with the three kids and then the full impact of my new responsibilities hit me. All of a sudden it dawned on me that I would have to wash, iron, and cook for four other people. I knew I loved Norm so I didn't tell him I was praying for lightning to strick me down before it was time to leave for Kingston, Pennsylvania.

Humor Time
