portable bar," and I said, "Oh". That night I came down with measles so I had Dr. Davis tell Norm that I was allergic to hope chests as well as to germs.

Two weeks later the truck driver called for the chest and instead of a refund, which the company would not hear of, we took it out in trade. We came home with two occasional chairs, a bookcase, a coffee table, a card table and an end table, almost. The salesman was pointing out the virtues of this particular end table as Norm said he would like a good end table made of either cast iron or cement preferably. The forceful person we were transacting our business with went on to say this table was strong enough that you could stand on it and the moment his back was turned Norm stood on it. A loud splintering noise reverberated through that furniture lover's paradise and the unsuspecting salesman moaned "mine cavein" and then caught sight of one Norman Smith. I have always worshipped Norm's great presence of mind and upon this occasion he didn't let me down. He said, pointing, "We'll take this, and this, and this, and this, and this," and when he came to what had once been a table he said, "I don't think we'll take that" and we backed out as gracefully as we could.

That night I thanked Norm for his good nature about not keeping the hope chest and he said, philosophically, "While there's life, there's no hope chest" and the first crisis in our married life was a thing of the past.
