The Girvans were relieved Wednesday about 11:20 P.M. when their radio report of the earthquake was interrupted by a phone call from their son, John, in Portland, Ore. John assured them that he and his family were safe. He told of neighboring buildings that were split in two. The mannequins in store windows danced and in his own home the furniture was disarranged and dishes knocked out of cupboards.

He added that he had just received a letter from his brothers, Tom and Bill who had arrived safely in Fairbanks, Alaska, via the new Yukon Highway.
