primitive sculpture as well as painting from Mexico, Peru and other of our south-of-the-border neighbors. The Indian cultures, both our own and that of South America, and the magnificent Spanish, have made their own contributions. Though Picasso in France continues to excite much comment, there is also a great deal of experimental and controversial work being done right here in the United States. The Art News Magazine of current exhibits and short articles has interesting information in this connection.

In the Fall we hope for some new books on contemporary painting, but already several are there. Guy Pene du Bois is represented by his "Artists Say the Silliest Things" and Henri is there and one or two others.
