"Peace of Mind' Joshua Leibman Reviewed by Roy E. Morgan

What can religion contribute to our personal hygiene? It was not so long ago that question was asked for the first ime, but in recent months the same question has been asked in many volumes and answered in many ways. However, the most neaningful proposal still seems to have been given in that first volame—"Peace of Mind" by the late Joshua Leibman.

Not so long ago we participated n a panel discussion on the topic of Christianity and the part it can play in establishing world order. At that time we came to the conclusion that the possibility for world betterment may well lie with the church, but that assuredly the possibility for peace of mind lies within ourselves. That's what makes this little volume of Doctor Leibman's so significant.

Certainly, as Dr. Leibman clearly points out, peace of mind is not omething that can be purchased at your corner drug store— or at any other of our all-purposeful twentieth century establishments. Nor is it something that we can buy as we do nostrums or panaceas. Education does not necessarily give it to us, nor does entertainment. Some sick personalities seek it through alcoholism, or barbituates, or sensuous indulgences, but they don't find it that way, either.

How then are we to achieve peace of mind? According to the premise of Dr. Leibman, it's by the fusion of religion and phychology. Although a rather new idea when first proposed, the idea has caught on. Not only have there been these numerous books already mentioned, but radio programs and even movies with the same general concept. As this outstanding Jewish thinker saw it, what mankind today needs is a faith that will combine the substance of the old with the light of the new.

There is much to be said for this point of view. The arguments for it are impressive, particularly if religion is to make headway against what might be called "post-Darwinian materialism". But no matter what it's called and no matter how organized church groups may look upon this thinking, in the mind of the individual there is an urgent and desperate need for some such peace of mind, tion-now let's look at some of the details. The book get down to particulars in chapters dealing with the part which conscience must play in our attitudes and thinking;

the related psychotic phenomena of repression and sublimation; the need for mastering our fears; the psychological value of grief, and many other problems-all of them important if we are to understand

Frankly, much of the book is tremendously stimulating. For example, there is Dr. Leibman's analysis of the historical development of religion from its very or-Newly formed Back Mountain igins at a time when man was just Volunteer Fire Co. Theoretically, as Dr. Leibman points out, religion wishes to make men serene and inwardly peaceful by teaching a loving and forgiving God. That is fine, but in practice, isn't there too much un-(Continued on Page Seven)

Barnyard Notes

Jim Kozemchak brought us a gallon of the best sweet cider we ever tasted. Jim got the recipe from the Department of Agriculture and uses just the proper blend of Baldwins, Spys and other apples when he goes to press.

Pepper, the little Spaniel that owns Clyde Cooper's family, is a patient at Dr. George Flack's animal hospital. She has a sore throat and influenza. We miss her mornings on our way to work. Usually she crawls across the lawn on her belly to weedle a pat on the head when we're too busy to say "Good morning" to other folks.

A pair of nuthatches, a dozen chickadees and a couple of blue jays, thrown in for good measure, have practically exhausted our crop of sunflower seeds-and the winter hasn't begun.

Guess we talked too much about our pet skunk. We haven't seen hide nor hair of him since we wrote about him. Back Mountain skunks are publicity shy while their city cousins steal the headlines. But this one needn't worry. He's safer in the Barnyard than

Saw a beautiful buck the other evening. If he's wise he'll wander over to the Barnyard and keep the skunk company until after hunting season.

Peanuts are $1.10 for three pounds. Hope the gray squirrel will appreciate that the next time he jabbers from the apple tree outside our window at 6 a.m.

Stripes has two beautiful kittens. Her litters are smarter as she grows older. These are going to have a good home with Mrs. Paul Nulton at Beaumont. Myra will miss them-but not for long. Stripes never lets her mistress down.

Clipped the wings of the white rock pullets the other evening by flashlight. Don't know who is the more disappointed—the hens or our mother-in-law. There was nothing she enjoyed more than to tell us "the hens are out" when we were in the middle of the evening paper or potting a geranium. First time we clipped their wings, we clipped both of them. They flew out anyway. The next time we clipped only one wing on each bird. Now they fly lopsided and get discouraged.

Never seem to be on schedule. Just got through potting the hyacinths, tulips and daffodils. It should have been done a month ago. They'll probably come on about the time the others bloom in

Once, though, we were on time. It was in college. Lost two hours credit for taking too many chapel cuts. Next semester resolved to go to chapel every morning. Did. Got all our required attendance in and could have stayed in bed every morning for the rest of the semester. That was when the college abolished compulsory chapel.

The distance from the Barn to the Post is more exciting than 42nd Street. Funny how the world narrows as you grow older. Sometimes a fellow becomes dissatisfied when he realizes that men his age are running the world. But if he looks at the job they are doing, he has no cause for envy. Harry Truman would probably make a better farmer than President. And he never was as good a merchant as a lot of fellows on Main Street-and Margaret, well we've heard better voices in the Methodist Choir, but they never got the build up.

WORLDWIDE BIBLE READING

The following Bible Passages will be read daily (Thanksgiving to Christmas)

"The Book to Live By" is the theme selected this year by the American Bible Society for the Worldwide Bible Reading. The plan, sponsored by the American Bible Society, is to get people in all parts of the world to read the same Bible selections daily between Thanksgiving to Christmas, November 24th and December 25th. Thirty-four countries participated in the program last year.
