The Bookworm

dissolved wrath and punishment in most religions? Of course, that may be the fault of the church, not of religion, but again in the minds of most aren't the two—that is the church and religion—the same? And if so, doesn't the church need to give some serious consideration to the fact if it hopes to render to mankind the spiritual peace that it promises?

A good many portions of the book could be discussed at great length, but there is no room for that in this report. One point we should like to make, though, is that this is not another Dale Carnegie's, "How to Win Friends and Influence People", not even a Henry Link's "Return to Religion". This is a far more serious volume than either—a book that needs to be considered, first, in respect to its contribution to religious philosophy (and there we refer to psychology as it was referred to in the early days before it presumably became a science); and secondly, as a practical volume with many sound ideas for any one of us. Although we didn't mention it, the book is also well-written, at points with a clear cut lucidity that gives it a beauty all of its own.

Health And Happiness Are At Nature's Door

A berry picker of note during the past summer was Miss Anna Holcomb, Shavertown and Lake Silkworth. She harvested hundreds of quarts of berries of all kinds.

Seriously ill for many months during the past years, Miss Holcomb does the job with the aid of her cane. Nearly seventy years of age and still far from completely well, she enjoys the opportunity to commune with nature.

A great lover of flowers and all of nature's gifts, Miss Holcomb spends every minute she can in the woodlands surrounding the home of her friend, Mrs. Adina Pollock, with whom she lives.

When the berry season came to an end, Miss Holcomb turned to harvesting fruit which abounds on Mrs. Pollock's property.

With the winter approaching Miss Anna will crochet unusual and lovely novelties and handiwork. This will keep her busy until summer once more arrives.

Mr. Hall has stated that all of the trees belong to families of war dead.
