YOU KNOW ME
BY Al, Himself

We have always been partial to dumps. Last week we took some of our debris to Lake Township disposal plant in order to make room in the house. We noticed a wonderful go-cart at the bottom of the steep bank of ashes and tin cans. A neighbor of ours, who came along for the five-mile ride had difficulty restraining us from climbing down to retrieve it.

"Why do you want that dirty contrivance?" he asked. "The handle is broken, the side is bashed in and it isn't any use as a baby carriage, even if you had babies."

"The wheels, man, the wheels," we replied. "What a wonderful soap-box wagon those wheels would support."

"—and what would you do with a soapbox wagon here?" he asked. "Give it to some kid to have fun pushing it along a sidewalk—!" Then we realized that we never saw a sidewalk in all of the Township.

All the way home we wondered what country kids did to have fun. When we were a kid more than half our pleasure came from the sidewalks of the suburbs of New York. Why, yes, there was even a song written about them. Al Smith made it famous. The girls skipped rope. Occasionally a meany of a male ran through the upraised loop just to break up the game. The girls squealed in pretended protest, making us believe they didn't like it. The soapbox wagons rolled along the smooth flagstones propelled by one leg-power, which was the forerunner of the soapbox derbies that are held yearly in Kingston Township.

The roller skating, every kid owned a pair; the hop scotch games —(if you played hop-scotch with a purchased disc, you were a girl, but if one battered up an old tin can into a flat shape then that removed the "sissy" stigma); the sliding lanes we'd form after the first snow of the winter, and you'd slide and slide until some grouch came home from work and poured ashes on it, yes, all that and more is the fun we used to have on the sidewalks of New York.

Occasionally we'd visit the dump and bring home remarkable things. There was one thing that worried us all of our boyhood. These treasures would disappear from our closet a week or two after we found them. Mom would enthuse over these wonderful additions to our home, but soon they would be gone. Once we found a beautiful candlestick. 'Tis true one of the decorative lobes was broken off on one side, but we laid it in our closet after Mom had praised us for our thoughtfulness in striving to beautify the parlor mantlepiece. If we could only find another, we wished —how nice they would both look —and lo! one day when we were pawing through the dump for treasures there it was, sticking up through the ashes, an exact replica of the candlestick found earlier. Why, even one of the lobes was broken off. We picked it up and placed it in our blouse, hiding it from the rest of the gang for fear of a bigger boy stealing our "find" and rushed all the way home. We will never forget the look on Mom's face when we displayed our treasure. We attributed it to a look of incredulosity that none could be so lucky as to find a mate to the candlestick picked up previously. We rushed to our closet to get out the first, and we looked and looked and looked and never did find it.

We felt sorry for Mom. She never could have those candlesticks adorn her mantlepiece. Our sorrow earned us a glass of lemonade and a piece of mince pie.

But to this day, we wonder what became of that first candlestick.

Hemlock
The State Tree

Eastern Hemlock with its irregular crown of dark green foliage, its slender gracefully drooping leader, and its massive trunk is a feature of the forest and open country on cool moist slopes and in well drained fertile valleys throughout the state. Since June 22, 1931, it has been Pennsylvania's state tree.

Hemlock is a member of the pine family and with the scarcity of other lumber, the light buff, soft, coarse grained wood has become of increasing importance. It has a straight, tall trunk and often lives for 600 years. While many trees are sixty to eighty feet high and two to three feet in diameter, heights over 100 feet and diameters exceeding four feet are not uncommon.

For many years, the bark was the only part of the tree that was used. It is an excellent source of tanning and huge monarchs of the forest were felled, stripped of their bark, and the logs left to rot on the ground.

The Department of Forests and Waters desires to stimulate the planting of this species which will endure considerable shade. It is not resistant to wind and, if planted on open, unprotected areas, it may be blown down.

Other trees available at the price of $6.00 per thousand are White Pine, Norway Spruce, White Spruce, Austrian Pine, Banks Pine, Japanese Red Pine, Pitch Pine, Scotch Pine, Table Mountain Pine, Virginia Pine, European Larch, Green Ash, Black Cherry, Black Locust, Red Oak, Tulip Poplar and Black Walnut.

Detailed information may be obtained by contacting the District Forester, Department of Forests and Waters, Scranton, Pennsylvania.
