list, maybe down to the celery and coffee, and bing, there'd go the phone, dead as a mackerel, and you with the grocery list in your hand and still no bread and lettuce. The only thing that is going to make me feel good about going back to Afton is that up there they don't have this kind of a phone. Well, as I was saying, Weekend guests were entertained by Mr. and Mrs. —

The transportation wigwagged from the doorway "Leave it ring," he advised. "It's after hours, isn't it?"

The phone exploded in my hand. "LAND SAKES," said Miss Klineb. "I'm about crazy. I'll be using language unbecoming a lady if this keeps up."

"Go right ahead," I encouraged her, "and if you run out of words I'll supply some you've never even heard of. Ever hear about that farmer who was well known for his vocabulary? Well, one day he was driving up a steep hill with a load of apples and the tailboard of his wagon fell out. The on-lookers clapped their hands over their ears and shrank back, but they might have saved themselves the trouble. After the last apple was bouncing down the hill Mr. Whozit remarked that the ladies need have no fear, his vocabulary was unequal to the occasion."

"Mr. and Mrs. John Hildebrand, Loyalville, or maybe you better say Meeker," began Bess firmly, "were guests—"

The transportation gave up and sat in the car, his head dropped over the window ledge.

Four phone calls later, the Sweet Valley items were in the bag.
