Robert Kemmerer Visits Dallas Post In Person

Robert Kemmerer came into the office during the holidays, and on his own two feet. Escorted by his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Kemmerer, Shavertown, his two hundred pounds uniformed in a spotless Marine outfit, Robert wanted to say hello to everybody before returning to Bethesda Naval hospital for an operation on the seat of his most disabling injury, a wound above his left ear. A silver plate will replace the lost bone and the wound will heal, with only a hairline scar to show its location.

Kemmerer, up until six weeks ago a litter case following serious injury in Korea, is learning to walk and talk again, making his good left side take on the burden of his paralyzed right. This is exemplified by the comparative wear of his shoes. Both of them polished brightly according to service regulations, the left shoe shows much wear, the right shoe is completely flawless and unwrinkled.
