Lice, Not Sap, Mar Cars Under Trees

That's not sap which spots your car when parked under a shade tree—it's "honeydew" made by hundreds of aphids or plant lice. While bees, ants and flies love it, motorists hate it, say entomologists of the State Department of Agriculture.

New and tender leaves of street and roadside trees provide welcome shade for parking cars—but they also attract aphids which suck the sap and excrete honeydew, that gooey, sticky stuff that gets on your windshield, car roof and fenders all summer long. Only a heavy rain or a car wash will remove the spots.

There is only one way to avoid honeydew drops on your car—don't park under a tree.

Married Saturday

MRS. CARL L. LOUCKS

Miss Marguerite A. Greenwood, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Raymond C. Greenwood, Trucksville Gardens, became the bride of Carl R. Loucks, son of Mrs. Charlotte Loucks, city, Saturday afternoon at 2:30 in Kingston Presbyterian Church, Rev. William A. Parsons performed the double ring ceremony. Miss Marion E. The full skirt had Rosepoint French Chantilly lace panels ending in a double length train. Her veil of imported French silk illusion was fastened to a scoop bonnet of French imported Chantilly lace and trimmed with clusters of orange blossoms. She carried an arm bouquet of calla lilies showered with sweet peas and wore the pearls her mother wore on her wedding day.

A reception and dinner followed at the Kingston House, after which the couple left on a trip through the Southern states. They will reside at 611 Gibson Avenue, Kingston.

Pre-nuptial parties for the bride included a luncheon by Mrs. Hugh Ridall, showers by Miss Mary Porter, Miss Harriet Prater and Mrs. William Lipfert. Miss Marguerite A. Dorsech, Detroit, aunt of the bride, entertained the wedding party at a dinner in Hotel Redington following rehearsal.

Ruggles Operate Real Country Store

counter held shredded coconut. The rack of fresh bakery products seemed an anachronism.

I had run across the word clevis in the course of general reading, but had never seen one. Here were clevises in any desired quantity, hundreds of horse-shoes in assorted styles and sizes in an adjoining room, calf and chick-feed in fancy percale pants.

Upstairs, picking our way over stacked merchandise, we took note of an old bung starter and a kerosene pump, relics of a day when syrup and kerosene and crackers came in barrels, salt mackerel in kegs, and the cat rested comfortably and by right of long usage in the prunes.

Modernized now, and featuring a large and lethal rat-trap instead of a cat, the store delivers gasoline, courtesy of an electric pump, to a restless travelling public, handles baker's bread and penny candy, but manages to retain its nineteenth century atmosphere and its unhurried demeanor.

You can still find an old-fashioned coffee mill or a copper wash-boiler in stock, or you can buy the latest thing in roll roofing and shingles and shiny new gutter-pipe.

The heavy hand-made door shuts out the glare of the sun and the thundering summer traffic. There is a coolness and solidity and peace about the place that is restful. Nobody seems to be in a hurry.

We bought a pound of shredded coconut and some bandanas for the cow-boy crowd, and we'd have been glad to linger longer on the strength of the purchases, but some customers appeared and we released Mr. Ruggles to attend to their wants.

Mr. Ruggles retired from active ownership and management of the store some years ago, handing the reins to his daughter Alice and her husband Kenneth Williams, but Milton takes a postman's holiday. He appears every morning to wait on customers and wrap packages, for he is a smart man. He knows that once completely retired, a man is literally bored to death.

We enjoyed our visit with him, and we hope to see him again. We hope that we did not chase him up and down stairs too enthusiastically, and that if we did he will forgive us.
