Dorrance Family Relinquishes Long Presidency Of Association

The fourth member of the Dorrance family to hold the presidency of Wyoming Commemorative Association, Miss Frances Dorrance, will preside at Tuesday's observance at Wyoming Monument, then relinquish the presidency to Colonel T. H. Atherton.

Observance will be at 10:30 A.M., with an address by Dr. Paul A. Wallace, editor of the quarterly, "Pennsylvania History", professor at Lebanon College, and member of The Pennsylvania Historical and Museum Commission. He will speak on "This Land is my Inheritance."

Exercises will be open to the general public.

The Association commemorates the 1778 Massacre, when Indians from the Six Nations swept down the Susquehanna in collaboration with the British, and nearly wiped out the young settlement. History records that only old men and young boys, settlers not fit for military service, were left at the settlement to combat the bloodthirsty horde, but that providentially Colonel Zebulon Butler and Colonel Nathan Dennison were home on leave, otherwise the catastrophe would have been complete.

Charles Dorrance and Steuben Jenkins called the citizenry to observe the 100th anniversary of the massacre in 1878, and organized the Wyoming Commemorative Association officially in 1881. Charles Dorrance was the first president. It was Benjamin Dorrance, an ancestor, who lived through the massacre as a twelve-year-old boy.

Upon Charles Dorrance's death in 1892, Calvin Parsons filled the presidency until 1895, when Benjamin Dorrance took over and served until his death in 1922.

Miss Anne Dorrance, following in her father's footsteps, accepted the presidency in 1922 and served until her own death in February of this year.

Miss Frances has taken the chair pro-tem, the fourth of her direct line to hold the honor. She will relinquish the post, and the presidency will pass from the Dorrance family to T. H. Atherton on Tuesday.

Three Back Mountain men are vice presidents, Colonel Dorrance Reynolds, Harry B. Schooley, and Abram Nesbitt 2nd.
