Speed Is Blamed For Increase In Traffic Deaths

The State's Bureau of Highway Safety has asserted "it can be definitely established that 'speed' and driving too fast for conditions" cause almost half or all rural traffic deaths.

In making this statement the Bureau pointed to its latest tabulation of highway fatalities which showed an increase of 48 for the first six months of this year over the same period of 1950.

Actually highway fatalities in the rural areas increased 55 in the first half of 1951 over the same period of 1950 but a decrease of seven in urban areas reduced the overall increase to 48.

"No one can deny logically that if the element of speed could be reduced on the highways, that traffic deaths would also be reduced," the Bureau asserted.

"A wider enforcement of the present speed laws, if it were possible, would probably accomplish the same results. But, it would be physically impossible for any police force to keep pace with the monstrous increase in the number of motor vehicles and operators of the past decade.

"For this reason, our highways cannot be sufficiently patrolled to curb the antics of the selfish driver. 'Speed' arrests in Pennsylvania exceeded 65 per cent of all traffic arrests.

"Unfortunately, it is the speeder who is NOT caught who is the killer on our highways."

In the first six months of this year there were 689 traffic fatalities of which 425 were on rural roads and 264 on urban highways. In the same period of 1950 there were 641 highway deaths of which 370 were rural and 271 urban, an increase of 55 in rural deaths and a decrease of seven in urban.

In June of this year there were 118 fatalities against 106 in the same month of last year. In June the state trend for the first half of the year was reversed, here being 72 rural and 46 urban deaths this year against 74 rural and 32 urban deaths in June 1950, a decrease of two in rural areas and an increase of 14 in urban communities.

In the first six months of this year there were 250 pedestrian fatalities against 233 in the same period of 1950. There were 102 rural deaths in the first half of 1951 against 79 in the same period of 1950 and 148 urban pedestrian deaths in the first half of 1951 against 154 in the same period of 1950.

In June of this year there were 27 urban and nine rural pedestrian fatalities against 10 rural and 18 urban in June 1950.

There were 32 fatalities on the Pennsylvania Turnpike in the first half of this year against 21 in the same period of 1950, not included in the state totals.
