Third Smallest Potato Crop In Pa. In 51 Years

From the smallest potato acreage ever recorded in Pennsylvania, farmers will harvest the third smallest crop of spuds in 51 years, the State Department of Agriculture announces.

Federal-State surveys reveal only 83,000 acres planted this year compared with 95,000 in potatoes last year and 100,000 in 1866, at the close of the Civil War.

In spite of the record low acreage this year, improved cultural methods and control of damage by insects and disease will enable farmers to average a record high yield of 200 bushels per acre for a total crop of 16,600,000 bushels. Records reveal that the only years when total production was smaller than the 1951 estimate were 1945, when a crop of 16,577,000 bushels was harvested, and 1900 when the total was 16,240,000 bushels.

This year's Pennsylvania potato acreage is 13 per cent under 1950. The shrinkage is in line with desire of growers to balance supply and demand, officials said. Production last year was 18,525,000 bushels compared with the 10-year average of 19,176,000 for the year 1940-49 inclusive.

The crop made excellent vine growth during June and the stand generally is good. Late blight was reported in practically all areas by mid-July.

For the United States as a whole, the downward trend in potato acreage continued this year, but yield prospects are generally excellent, the survey revealed. The estimate crop of 356 million bushels, although smaller than in recent years, will be adequate to meet the nation's requirements, observers said. Production is expected to be smaller than for any year since 1941.

Government purchases for the 1950 national crop amounted to approximately 100 million bushels, leaving about 340 million bushels for consumption through regular channels. This year, for the first time since 1942, there is no government mandatory price support program for potatoes in any state. Pennsylvania potato growers voted down price supports last year.

looked for these bloated people. He found many bloated faces, but not from starvation. He travelled from State to State telling his story about unfortunate Europeans and always carried his documents with him. At state lines he expected to see armed officials who would demand his papers. All he saw was a sign informing him that he had just crossed a border.

"You have no idea," he informed us, "just what that freedom meant to me." We wish we had space to publish his entire story. If you ever hear of him speaking again nearby, our advice to you is not to miss him, and let us know where he is and we'll go with you to hear him again.

of a very good friend of mine, Mrs. Dixon. She used to hire me to take care of her pretty flowers. I am sure every one will tell you something about how pretty Mrs. Dixon's and my mother's flowers are. The flowers here are not as nice but almost as nice. The farms here are neat and clean. We get milk from Holland. It is almost as good as milk from the Payne Farm.

Well, I was just thinking about the Payne farm, run by a very nice man, Mr. Stineburger. I'm sure every one can remember him. When I worked for him he was a very good boss. Sometimes I would never see him for a week or so, but I would go on with my work and he was well pleased as I kept the cows in good shape. There were 31 cows to milk. Walter Elston was getting worried as to what he would do with all the milk, but everything turned out fine, as Mr. Elston sold all the milk and Mr. Stineburger was well pleased with his cows. I only hope I can have a try at the farm again someday, as I want to beat the record of 31 cows to milk, so Mr. Elston better get the biggest dairy in Pennsylvania, for when I come home on the farm again I am going to try to beat my old record.

I am sure everybody will tell you how pretty the cows were at the Payne farm. We cleaned them off good every day and we kept the barn clean every day. I can tell you, this Mr. Stineburger is a good boss, the only boss who let me have his truck to drive to work in, and did the good things he did for me while I was home. I am proud to be with and try to please everyone on the farm in every place I work. So I will return to the farm and until then I will close. Hope to write soon to them.

Yours truly,
Pfc. Willard Hoyt
