Announce Health Poster Contest

All School Children
Eligible To Enter

Annual Health Poster Contest sponsored by Luzerne County Medical Society in conjunction with the State Society is now under way. All school children in Luzerne County are eligible.

Object of the contest is to bring to children the importance of good health and safety habits and to enable them to express their ideas pictorially. Entrants become eligible to win one of the cash prizes offered by the County Society and thus the cash contest to try for $375 in prizes.

Students from first grade through the twelfth may enter in which there are four divisions, with two cash prizes in each, so that children of a particular age compete only with those in the same age group. Posters must be received not later than April 1, 1952, at the Medical Society Building, 130 South Franklin Street, Wilkes-Barre. Winners in the County contest are entered in the State contest at the annual meeting of the Medical Society of the State of Pennsylvania in September, 1952. Folders and letters announcing the details of the contest have been mailed to all school superintendents, supervising principals and art teachers throughout the county. The Woman's Auxiliary to the Luzerne County Medical Society is assisting the Public Relations Committee of the Medical Society in conducting the contest.

Dr. Stephen A. Jonas is chairman of public relations, and Mrs. John F. Drapiewski is poster contest chairman for the Woman's Auxiliary.

CAMERA TOPICS

By T. T. Holden*

Material for original pictures lies all around you, as evidenced by this Honor Award winner from the Graflex Photo Contest by Russell McCoy. It is much more fun to take this kind of picture than to be content copying other peoples.

DON'T BE A COPY CAT

There is a certain view of New York's skyline which must have been the subject for tens of thousands of photographs. Every amateur camera fan interested in photographing the city eventually finds the spot from which this picture was taken and proceeds to shoot a duplicate.

Too many amateurs are afflicted with this desire to copy other people's pictures. They will see a fine photograph in a magazine and immediately set out to imitate it. At camera clubs and lectures they wait until an expert has set up all the elements of a good picture and then content themselves with shooting away at his pose, his lighting, and his composition. There is too much copy cat picture-making, as a glance at the entries in any salon or contest will attest, and much too little original thinking shown by today's amateur photographers.

No, it is not against the law to imitate better photographers for your own pleasure. But it also is not a good way to improve your own creative ability, and the results cannot possibly give you the same satisfaction you will get from your own original work. When you find a book you like, you wouldn't waste the time and effort to sit down and copy it word for word. Yet copying other people's pictures is just about the same thing.

Study the expert's pictures all you like. It is an excellent way to learn lighting and composition. Try to improve on their efforts by handling the same material differently. Experiment all you wish, but don't be content to be a copy cat.

If you concentrate upon original treatments of original subjects, you will find you will make few pictures, but spend most of your time looking for them. This is as it should be. The more time and thought you put into finding a picture subject, the better your chances of making the kind of photograph you will be really proud to show as your work. Photographers who spend all their time snapping away at subjects too often are so busy with the mechanics of picture-making that they don't bother to put the thought into their work which is the only way yet discovered to make really fine pictures.
