

General Eisenhower Is Choice Of Young Voters In All States

Youth Is Convinced "War Or Peace" Is Issue And They Want A United Country To Face It

By BRUCE H. ZEISER

Dwight D. Eisenhower has emerged as the overwhelming favorite of young people of America in this year's Presidential race.

I have spent the last four months traveling around the United States talking with young people and organizing Youth for Eisenhower clubs in cities and towns, farms and factories, and on college and high school campuses. East, Midwest, Far West or South, it seems to make no difference—the young people choose Ike by a margin more lopsided than has ever been accorded to any other candidate for President in recent political history.

At the colleges, for example. At latest report, there had been 96 mock Presidential polls and 67 mock Republican conventions held by college students, participated in by 492 colleges and universities with an estimated total student body of over 1,000,000 students. Ike was "nominated" in every one of the 96 polls and in 61 of the 67 mock conventions, and rolled up a 3-1 victory over his nearest opponent, Senator Taft, by polling over 48,000 votes to Taft's 16,000. Ike's victory margin on the campus was better than 2-1 over all Republican opponents combined. And these figures are representative of all young voters—in all Gallup Polls and in each of primary elections of New Hampshire, Minnesota, New Jersey, Pennsylvania and South Dakota. The voters under 30 years of age picked Eisenhower by margins ranging from 2-1 to higher than 4-1.

One of the most significant Eisenhower victories was at the mock convention at Washington and Lee University, where the student delegations were required to vote as the states they represented will vote at the Chicago convention. On the third ballot Ike had 460 votes and Taft had 447 votes, at which time Pennsylvania delegation, which had been splitting its vote, swung almost solidly to Eisenhower, thus insuring his nomination. One influential Virginia Republican, now a delegate to Chicago, told me before the mock convention that these college boys rarely missed picking a winner and that he for one would definitely be influenced by the outcome of the balloting at Washington and Lee.

Ike's showing was most spectacular in Ohio. I spent a week in that so-called Taft stronghold encouraging Ike clubs to make an old-fashioned college try for their candidate, and the result was far better than I had expected. Out of 15 Ohio colleges participating in mock Republican Conventions 14 chose Ike and the other chose Governor Warren. The most embarrassing setback for Senator Taft occurred at Hiram College mock convention at which Taft himself delivered the keynote address. The convention chose Dwight D. Eisenhower for President on the third ballot. To top all this off, Ohio State University held its own "primary" on the same day as the state's primary and nominated Ike, who got more votes than all other Republican opponents combined. I think this is an indication of what might have happened had Eisenhower's name been on the ballot in the Ohio primary.

Youth for Eisenhower is dedicated to the purpose of demonstrating to the Republican Party in general and to the delegates to Chicago convention in particular that the young voters in this country want Dwight Eisenhower nominated for the Presidency. The above record doesn't leave much room for argument on that conclusion. But several influential Republicans here in Luzerne County have asked me why the young people like Ike. I want to answer that question because it is one of the most important political questions of 1952.

Young people are looking for a candidate with what some of them have termed "a capacity for leadership." Such a quality is harder to define than to recognize in a candidate. I believe the young voters are disgusted with the present incumbent of the White House largely

ABOUT THE AUTHOR

Bruce H. Zeiser, national college director of Youth for Eisenhower, is a grandson of Mrs. H. H. Zeiser of Dallas and the late Harry Zeiser former superintendent of Wilkes-Barre City Schools.

During the past few months he has visited college campuses and youth groups in practically every eastern, central and mid-western state.

This week Mr. Zeiser interrupted his flight to Chicago where he will be engaged in pre-convention duties for General Eisenhower, to spend three days with his grandmother and to confer with Luzerne County political leaders and newspaper men.

A graduate of Harvard University and Harvard Law school, Mr. Zeiser during World War II was a Lieutenant in the U. S. Navy with a communications unit in the Pacific. From 1948 until 1950 he was president of Rhode Island Young Republicans, and until his present leave, was assistant counsel for the Armed Services Petroleum Purchasing Agency of the Department of Defense in Washington, D. C.

A veteran, as a student of politics since childhood, and as a young man—he is twenty-eight—he is qualified to speak for the younger voter. Editor because they do not consider him a big enough man for the job. They seem to be seeking a man whose record has been one of positive achievement rather than of opposition (even though that opposition is highly skillful and partly of a positive variety). They are not greatly concerned with the field of endeavor in which a candidate has become a leader because they are generally convinced that the quality of leadership transcends occupational lines. For a variety of reasons, the young people in this country yearn for a President in whom they can place their trust and confidence as a leader of a united people.

Young people want a man who knows the ins-and-outs of war. Most voters under 30 were more or less intimately connected with World War II and practically none of them are far removed from the present "police action" in Korea (which most of them term "war" with no hedging). I find a strong belief among my contemporaries that our present economic and military commitments in Europe have kept the Soviet Union from starting World War III and therefore are a necessary unpleasantness; but, that our present position in the Far East is the result of a dreadful series of blunders and that the status of the Korean War has now reached the utterly ridiculous. They are convinced that the major issue of 1952 is "War or Peace?" and that a leader with intimate experience with Europe and the Soviet Union is their best insurance against World War III and their best guarantee that the investment they made in their country in World War II will not be frittered away again.

Lastly, I find that the young voters of the United States tend more strongly than ever to place their trust and confidence, and cast their vote, in and for a man rather than a political party. It is, of course, a political fact that about 30% of the electorate (about 15,000,000 voters) deny party membership.

Mrs. Goddard's Pet Lovebird Explores Pringle Possibilities

"It's strictly for the birds," according to Mrs. Paul Goddard, Goss Manor. This bird story begins about a month ago when Mrs. Goddard bought a lovely green parakeet in Coral Gables, Florida.

On her return North she was following a Redcap through Pennsylvania station in New York, carrying the cage with her new pet, when suddenly the bottom of the cage slipped and the bird squeezed out somehow to fly to the ceiling of the huge waiting room. The few minutes that remained before the train left were not long enough for Mrs. Goddard to regain her bird, and so she left it sitting high in the station.

Not at all discouraged, Mrs. Goddard bought another green "lovebird" at the Pet Shop in Kingston. But this one was to suffer an even worse fate. The Goddards had the bird for about two weeks, and it was just becoming tamed, learning to fly around the house and light on the family's shoulders. But one Sunday, the Goddards went to the Prince of Peace Church, and returned to find that their boxer, Fritz, had devoured the bird.

Now Mrs. Goddard was determined to keep and tame one of the elusive birds. She bought another one, this time a blue one, hoping that the change in color would bring a change in luck. But no. The next morning David, 15, and Tommy, 12, the Goddard boys, were playing with the bird when it flew away.

On Monday night, it visited the Harry Howells in Fernbrook. The bird had a band on its leg, containing the words Number "75", so the Howells released the bird in the morning, sure that it would return to its home. Unfortunately, the parakeet wasn't ready to return to the Goddards. It flew on to Pringle.

In the mean time, Mrs. Goddard had placed an advertisement in the paper for the return of her missing bird. Since there had been no answer, she bought a fourth bird, a Colbalt blue one. No sooner had she brought the bird home than she received a call from Pringle on Wednesday evening. The missing bird had been found.

And so the Goddards have two beautiful blue parakeets, "Petey and Chico". If she can keep these two for longer than a week, Mrs. Goddard plans to buy a female and raise little "lovebirds" to get themselves lost or eaten.

Major Places Third At State

Will Judge Poultry At Kansas City

A Jackson Township boy placed third in the Poultry Judging contest conducted as part of the annual State Future Farmers of America Convention held at Pennsylvania State College last week. Darrel Major, son of Mr. and Mrs. Homer Major of Truckville RD. 1, will participate in the Kansas FFA Convention at Kansas City this fall as a result of his outstanding performance in a field of 132 contestants.

The contest consisted of judging classes of live poultry as layers according to pigmentation, molt and handling quality; also one class of 10 birds was judged on a "keep or cull" basis by sight. A class of live market birds and one of dressed fowl; 50 eggs to be graded for exterior defects in 3 1/2 minutes and 10 eggs to be candled for interior defects completed the contest.

Darrel is a Junior at Lehman-Jackson Joint School, where he is an "A" student of Vocational Agriculture. He has held the post of Secretary of the Blue Ridge Chapter of the FFA and is now President of that organization. His project program in Vocational Agriculture has been large in the past and he is continuing in that fashion, hoping to become a farmer upon graduation from school.

Idetown Woman Critically Hurt Crossing Road

Mrs. Jennings Is In Oxygen Tent At Nesbitt Hospital

Surrounded by her family, Mrs. Margaret Jennings, 55, R.D. 1, Dallas, is still in critical condition, in an oxygen tent at Nesbitt Memorial Hospital. She was struck at 7:40 Wednesday morning in Idetown by an automobile driven by Morris H. Wasserstrom, Harveys Lake.

Mrs. Jennings was on her way to work at Natona Mills and was walking to meet Mrs. Mona Montross who was waiting for her in a car near Cave's Store. As she walked across the road between two cars she was struck and thrown into the air.

Mrs. Edith Boice and Doris Spencer, companions of Mrs. Montross, rushed to her aid. Mrs. Boice covered her while Miss Spencer phoned for Dr. H. G. Gallagher, Dallas, and the Harveys Lake ambulance.

At Nesbitt Hospital it was revealed that her skull was fractured, her right leg broken in several places, and there was a possibility of severe internal injuries.

The three women accompanied their friend to the hospital and then notified her family of the accident.

Mrs. Jennings, a widow, lives with her eighty-year-old mother, Mrs. William Weaver. She has three sons, William John, Lloyd, and Robert, and a daughter, Mrs. Willard Roberts, Plymouth. Her brother, William Weaver, is also employed in the boiler room at Natona Mills and as plant traffic officer.

FROM

PILLAR TO POST

By Mrs. T. M. B. Hicks, Jr.

Maybe you think it was hot here in the hills last week. You should have been in New York, dressed in a wool suit which looked like the proper thing when school at Columbia first opened, but rapidly became passe as the thermometer zoomed.

Along with the men who were invited to shed their coats as the sessions steamed up and the fans whirled faster and faster, we shed our own good old blue flannel job and settled down to business feeling much better.

We think that a candid camera shot of the feet under the big oval conference table would be a revelation. Directly across from us there sits a tall gal who wears striped cotton play shoes. Her legs are too long to accommodate themselves, so her feet turn over and lie on their sides, first in one direction and then in another. Next to her is a tiny girl who wears a reversible grey cord skirt with a crimson lining. Or is it scarlet? She sits on her feet.

Alongside her is the plump blonde who slips off her pumps as soon as she sits down, and goes (completed on Page 8)
