and two quarts of cod liver oil. John Roberts is shown caring for the bull terriers which are among the most famous in the country.

Women of Kiwanis met Wednesday evening at the Country Club for a business meeting following the monthly dinner. Mrs. T.M.B. Hicks was guest speaker, recalling Thanksgivings of a bygone day based upon a story by Della Lutes in "Millbrook."

Each member fashioned for herself from white napkins a Pilgrim cap and collar, and had an opportunity to state particular causes for thankfulness.

FARM TOPICS

Stretch Hay Supply—Feed only small amounts of hay at each feeding, small enough that you know a cow will clean it up, say Penn State extension dairy specialists. Then feed hay often, at least three times a day. Four or five hay feedings would be better. Dairymen short of hay can stretch the supply by reducing waste.

Store Root Crops—A storage cellar is the ideal place to keep root crops. However, they can be stored in a trench located in a spot that is well drained and where water will not accumulate. Cover with alternate layers of straw or hay and soil.

4-H Club Work Helps—Allen L. Baker, State 4-H Club leader at the Pennsylvania State College, believes that the 4-H clubs have made their influence felt in education for farming, homemaking, and rural community life through projects the members carry.

Wool Marketed—Almost 800,000 pounds of wool were marketed cooperatively by 28 pools in Pennsylvania this year. This figure does not include wool produced by farmers who did not sell through pools.

Feed Grain in Litter—When grain is fed in the litter, the hens not only get exercise but their scratching keeps the litter stirred.

Ventilate Barns—Two reasons for forced ventilation of dairy barns are given by Joseph McCurdy, Penn State extension agricultural engineer. He says that barns are tighter and more comfortable than formerly and the cows are bigger. A big cow gives off more moisture than a small cow.

Keep Surplus Seeds—Leftover vegetable seeds can be kept for planting next spring if properly stored. It is not necessary to keep them in cold storage, but they should not be held in heated rooms. About 50 degrees is satisfactory.

Prepare Festival—Groups are at work in 28 counties preparing for the Rural Talent Festival to be staged at the Pennsylvania Farm Show in Harrisburg, Tuesday evening, January 13. William R. Gordon, Penn State extension rural sociologist, is author and director of the festival, entitled "Susquehanna," the story of Pennsylvania.

Clean Home Grounds—Give the home grounds a general cleanup to improve the appearance of the property. Remove all insect-infested and disease-infested plants and burn them.

Use Salt Carefully—Poultry research at the Pennsylvania State College shows that salt should be added carefully to chick-growing rations. Salt poisoning can cause loss of young chicks.

Big Crowd At Coon Farm Sale

Brisk Bidding For Farm Equipment

A big crowd attended the public sale of farm equipment, cows and stock at the Harvey F. Coon farm, Wyoming RD 3 on Saturday afternoon.

In spite of unpleasant weather and a dull day, bidding was brisk. A Farmall M Tractor, twelve years old, brought $1,200. A grade cow brought the top price of $400.

The sale started at 12:30 with Howard Sands as auctioneer and Ralph Sands as sales manager. Shortly after four there was a downpour of rain but it failed to dampen the spirit of the crowd which stayed on until after 5 to buy the cattle which were auctioned under the electric lights.

Until the illness of Mr. Coon, who has been bedfast for several months but is now much improved, the Coon farm has been one of the outstanding potato producers in the Carverton area. Frequently the harvest has been as high as 5,000 bushels. Another big truck crop has been cabbage.

American Legion Home Gets Face-Lifting

American Legion Home, Huntsville Road is undergoing a face-lifting operation, with Perma-Stone scheduled to cover the basic foundation of wire mesh next week. Interstate Home Improvement Company has the contract. Interior was renovated in 1950.

STATE POLICE SAY

Of the 48 states and the District of Columbia, only 17 have compulsory motor vehicle inspection. Twenty-six have no compulsory inspection at all, five leave the matter up to the individual towns and cities, and one authorizes spot inspection by police.
