PILLAR TO POST

By MRS. T. M. B. HICKS

In case small things are getting you down, and you wonder what you have to be thankful for, we are introducing you to a guest speaker, Mrs. Harry Adams, of Frewsburg, New York, who wrote us a letter a month ago which we have carefully preserved for Thanksgiving. She can walk now, with frequent rests, she has been able to dispense with her nurse, and she is gradually taking on again the work that she loves to do, making a happy home for her husband and her little boy, a fat farm dog and a dozing tortoise-shell cat. Each morning she straps herself into a cruel steel cage which she cannot remove until she lies down at night.

Mrs. Adams speaks: How one's point of view does change in the space of so short a time- How bright and dazzling the lustre of dull tasks, once taken for granted, when for six long months citing to wrest permission from that despot, the doctor, to perform that dullest task of all, darning socks!

How long the patient waiting until the chance of a disappointing refusal is past, how thrilling to take a chair on the sidellines, when one months, with stern admionition not to even raise the head.

one I had worn for three years. walk That first brace, I had accepted with inner resentment and secret protest, fighting against necessity, but beaten on every count. But you see, wearing the new brace now means the difference btween taking the first wavering steps from bed to chair, and being doomed to a completely vegetable existence.

This is far from my first long "On the Farm Front" Every Day or serious illness, but it is one of the most painful and discouraging in a long history of ailments. My case is interesting to doctors, but has long ago passed that point of fascination for me. It is frustrating, for I love to work in my home, my church, and my community.

Last fall under my eighteenth anaesthetic, I submitted to an operation which I confidently expected would end all my troubles. It almost ended me instead. I had barely recovered from that when in February I was struck another underhand blow, totally unexpectedly. Had not the doctor assured me that my spine

Surely, I reasoned, a short time and a few new wonder drugs, and I'd be well again. But my doctor shook his head. And so, on April Fool's Day, peculiarly and ironically appropriate to the occasion, I was again admitted to the hospital which I had left with such a feeling of finality in November.

On Easter Sunday the doctor, who had steadfastly refused to grant permission, relented, and the next day the ambulance took me home. There in my bedroom was a high metal bed with boards instead of springs, its rigor somewhat relieved by a foam rubber mattress. "How long, doctor; must I lie on

I didn't believe him. I could not have borne the looking ahead into up the familiar routine, even from six months of pain, and utter boredom and endless expense if I had has lain on a hospital bed for six not been an incurable optimist. I went ahead from day to day, expecting the miracle of health, know-How eagerly did I anticipate the ing that some morning soon I would arrival of my new brace, so much feel the flush of renewed vigor in more rigid and confinling than the my limbs, and be able to rise and

It has been more than six months, and here I am, allowed to walk around a bit, graduating from two canes, to one, to none. I look back upon the six months with unbelief I embrace the cruel cage that keeps my back rigid and unmoving. I cannot stoop, I must sit with caution I must not go up and down stepsbut I can walk. I can even go outdoors into the soft Indian summer

How good the sunshine feels! Did it ever feel so good before? How soothing and musical the rustling of the reddening maple leaves. Surely (Jr. are in the dance sets. there has never been such fall coloring. The cattle on the far hills have never been so sleek and fat, so white against the green. The starlings gathering to go south, chatter happily in the trees, their iridescent feathers gleaming in the soft sunshine. I give them my blessing and wish them safe conduct on their long flight.

A year ago their depradations would have been an annoyance and an exasperation. But these are a special 4-IH project, and petunias are but transitory, only a few flowers left.

Will my new-found calmness last? Probably not. But having once more glimpsed the importance of enjoying the little everyday things lest they be snatched away, of examining each small happening lest some facet go unnoticed or unappreciated, I shall try never again to let impatience rule

Never again will I let the routine of housekeeping turn me into an automaton too busy to see and appreciate the day-to-day beauties with which I am surrounded. I shall remember that God's in His Heaven, all's right with the world, if I but keep calm in my soul, if I accept those things which come to me, not limply or in abject resignation, but as captain of my soul.

HAIR CHAMPION BOBS UP IN ITALY

THERE'S NO SHORT CUT to achieving fame for the world's longest hair, as Tatiana Cocuzzo, of Catania, Italy, will tell you. It took time and patience to achieve her three and a half feet of "crowning glory." Combing it out to full length at left takes three hours. Braiding it (right) is a task that requires the aid of her mother. (International)
