Sidewalk Engineers' Suggestions Help Dewey Hoover Fish For Truck

Sidewalk engineers gathered at the foot of Templeton Road early this week, to offer constructive suggestions to Dewey Hoover, who was winning a submerged 1936 Chevrolet truck closer and closer to shore, from its original location, fifty feet out in Harveys Lake, in water twenty-two feet deep. Complications included breaking of a sixty-foot wire cable; breaking of three heavy grappling hooks; and hanging-up of the dump truck against a ledge twenty feet from shore, still twelve feet under water.

David MacMillan's truck, in the hands of an unauthorized and inexperienced driver, Stanley Donovan, went out of control on precipitous Templeton Road, Saturday at 7:15 PM, with Donovan leaping from the careening vehicle before it rushed across the highway and railway tracks and catapulted far out in the lake. Donovan, resident of Bristol, had been told by Clarence Patton, delivering a load of furniture, not to handle the truck, but had taken it to the top of the hill and turned it around. Brakes were in good condition. The assumption is that Donovan failed to get the car into gear before it picked up dangerous speed.

Donovan was taken to Nesbitt Hospital in Harveys Lake sedambulance by Chief Edgar Hughes, assisted by Wallbridge Lienthal and Elwood Davis, following first aid by Dr. Lester Saidman. X-Rays showed fractures of ribs and collarbone.

A Noxen garage owner, neighbor of MacMillan, declined to tackle the salvage job, due to light equipment. Hoover had to enlist the aid of a heavy four-wheel drive truck, auxiliary to his own heavy wrecker.
