Chain Saw Makes History At Museum

The power and precision of the Mall Chain Saw are a feature of the history-making Hardwoods Exhibit at Chicago's famous Museum of Science and Industry, says Charles H. Long, local Mall Chain Saw Dealer.

The new exhibit is now complete after more than two years of development and work. Occupying 10,000 square feet of floor space, it is one of the museum's largest and gives prominent position to the tool which has revolutionized timber-cutting technique. The chain saw, producing at a capacity of up to ten times greater than old hand-saw methods, has boomed commercial timber operations. It has also meant a new income source for the farmer who can now himself alone—handle with ease the old woodlot back of the north 40.

The Mall Chain Saw was selected for the exhibit as representative of the finest in the industry. Consideration was given to the fact that Mall is not only a pioneer builder of chain saws but one of America's leading manufacturers. Thus, Mall becomes an important part of this Hardwoods Museum Exhibit, showing samples of hardwoods from all over the world and demonstrations of their uses.

Charles H. Long says that the models on view at the museum are the gasoline operated Mall Chain Saw, Model 2MG, and the gasoline operated Mall pinchless Saw, Model 2MGP.
