Value-Shop Fashion Parade Leaves Woman's Club Gasping At Prices

It was a Fashion Show, but with a difference, at Dallas Woman's Club meeting Wednesday night. Fourteen models tripped down the aisle in the meeting room at the Library Annex, pivoted slowly, exhibiting their attire, and disappeared, according to custom. The difference was that everything shown originated in the Value Shop.

Even the announcer, Mrs. Jonathan Valentine, modelled a three-piece outfit in tie-silk from the bargain racks. Melanie Hellersperk wrote the script, using the most up-to-date phraseology of leading coutouriers, describing each model in terms of line, material, cut, and suitability. She prefaced description by saying that no well dressed woman ever is guilty of exceeding a count of fourteen in assembling her costume. Shoes count for one point, but if stitched in contrast, two points. Gloves and hosiery, each a point, a hat four points, earrings a point, etc.

Janet Jenkins modelled a yellow brunch coat, Elaine Allen a scarlet jersey blouse worn with a scarlet and green plaid pleated skirt. Iris Pardini showed a casual sports jersey in beige, Grace Richardson a basic grey jersey.

Loretta Williams showed a pastel suit. As each model appeared, the size and price were announced, the price bringing gasps of disbelief, the size a breath of envy. Mrs. Valentine hastened to reassure the gathering. There were plenty of sizes thirty-eight and forty on the racks at the Value Shop, but models who could be coerced into exhibiting them in person were scarce. Nines and tens and tall fourteens were easier to persuade.

Janet Goeringer appeared in a soft jersey with unpressed pleats. Loretta Williams showed a pastel suit. Elaine Allen had a return engagement with a wine gabardine.

Doris Maturi modelled a soft dressmaker suit in powder blue. Mildred Commons went down the aisle in a royal blue flecked tweed suit which was so becoming to her that she bought it. Mrs. Valentine interrupted the show long enough to say that a good many of the models had fallen in love with the garments, and handed the treasurer the purchase price of the Mediterranean blue tie-silk she herself was wearing, slipping off the jacket to show the low-cut sun-back, suitable for cruise wear.

Madge Swebston modelled a soft grey suit. Grace Lee showed a navy linen topped by a blue and white stole, Abbie Kautz a raw silk casual. Evelyn Eck wore a black basic, accented with jewelry. Janice Lamb another black, in wool, with bracelet sleeves.

Elaine Allen and Doris Maturi modelled raincoats, belted and loose hanging.

Florence Davis showed an English greatcoat in shaggy grey wool over a red wool dress. Mrs. Lee modelled a casual coat in neutral wool over a stone blue crepe dress; Mrs. Davis a long-lined princess coat, dressy, with a shawl collar. Mrs. Lee came back wearing a wine broadcloth coat in long lines, with grey Persian lamb trim.

Doris Maturi showed an after-five frock, a cocktail or short evening dress with a removable jacket; Janet Goeringer a soft blue faille, self button trimmed, featuring unpressed pleats; Janet Jenkins a slim velvet skirt with a low cut cashmere top.

Evelyn Eck modelled a white evening or dinner dress embroidered in sequins, low square neck; Grace Richardson a blue taffeta; Loretta Williams a two-piece black faille with rhinestone buttons; Madge Swebston a long evening dress in black. Janice Lamb showed a long Kelly green evening gown with horizontal tuck treatment and a bateau neckline.

Lettie Culver was called from the floor to show a red wool dress she had recently purchased. Abbie Kautz modelled a sleeveless turquoise net over stiff taffeta, the answer to a mother's search for a party dress for a teen-ager.

Iris Pardini showed what could be done with a white dress by shortening it and employing the surplus material. Evelyn Eck modelled a bridesmaid's gown in pale green organdy over taffeta.

Present in addition to those already named: Mesdames Richard N. Stouffer, Franklin A. Wagner, George Flack, Robert Bachman, Robert Graves, Marion Harter, Byron Creasy, Herman C. Thomas, Lester Jordan, Michael Vario, Robert VanHorn, Oswald Griffith, Robert Wallace, Joseph Sekera, Francis Ambrose, John Vernon, Robert Milne, Paul Goddard, Donald Evans, John Williams, Byron Mitchell, Theodore Ruff, Alice Yaple, Daniel Richards, William Clewell, Wilson Maury, Lewis LeGrand, James Besecker, William Wright, Paul Monahan, Norti Bert, T. M. B. Hicks, Ralph Dixon, Misses Mary Weir and Patricia Reynolds.
