WHEN YOUR DOG IS SICK
by Dr. E. M. Gildow
Director, Friskies Research Kennels

The average dog owner can usually tell when his pet is ill, but seldom knows which ailment is indicated by the symptoms. So it's always wise to have a veterinarian diagnose the illness and advise treatment.

Use a rectal thermometer to check the dog's temperature; normal should be 101 degrees. Fits or convulsions are usually a warning of an ailment or disturbance. Again, this should be determined by professional advice.

Always seek competent attention for such diseases as distemper or infectious hepatitis. Worming the dog also is best left to the veterinarian.

Keep the convalescent dog warm and out of drafts. Tempt him with new foods if he refuses to eat, or try feeding him by hand or changing his feeding place. Foods he may relish at this time are minced raw beef, beef broth, chicken, eggs, rabbit, milk and cereal.

If your dog resists food for several days he may have to be force-fed. Give him liquid foods from a small bottle. Tilt the dog's head and gently pull out the cheek until the lower lip forms a pouch. Pour in liquid slowly, giving him time to swallow. Use the same method for administering liquid medicine. Drop pills back of the dog's tongue and stroke the throat so he will swallow.

Feeding Tips: Several all-purpose dog foods contain vitamin A. It strengthens the mucous membranes, providing resistance against pneumonia, bronchial infections, distemper, colds and ear inflammations.
