Hay Crop Suffers From Too Much Rain

The State Department of Agriculture reports that during July nearly all cut hay suffered rain damage and large quantities spoiled in the fields on Pennsylvania farms.

Burning of spoiled hay in the winrows was common in some localities.

New growth in many fields had a good start before the cut hay was removed. Continuing rainy weather delayed cutting, and in western counties especially much hay became over-ripe. Despite the heavy growth of grass and legumes shortages of hay are eminent in some sections. Quality and feeding value of late first cuttings will be well below average.

As of August 1, the Department estimated the total hay crop in Pennsylvania at 3,648,000 tons compared with 3,306,000 tons in 1955 and the 10-year average of 3,483,000 tons.

Summer rains kept pastures in good grazing condition, 92 per cent of normal on August 1 compared with 56 per cent a year earlier when drought conditions prevailed.
