

Waverly Show September 9-10

Many Will Attend
From Dallas Area

Waverly, Pennsylvania, is again making ready for its fourteenth annual Antiques Show at Waverly Community House Monday and Tuesday, September 9th and 10th, the week after Labor Day. Mrs. Frank E. Hemelright is General Chairman, and Mrs. E. C. Aydelott, Vice Chairman.

Its reputation as a fine show is attested by the fact that most of the exhibitors have been returning for years. There is waiting list for booths. The visitors' book shows that each year the area from which they come grows larger, and now covers all of Eastern Pennsylvania, and adjacent New York and New Jersey.

Twenty-five exhibitors will display their best pieces. There will be a loan exhibit arranged by the Committee, using articles loaned by residents of the Abingtons.

Through the cooperation of two of the Waverly churches, dinner is served each evening, and a snack bar is open during the afternoon and evening.

Waverly is a residential village nine miles north of Scranton (on Route 407), and the Community House is a large brick building on the Main Street, so out-of-town visitors will have no trouble in finding it. They will find that a visit is not only enjoyable, but well worthwhile.

Trucksville P.O. Offers Career

Richard J. Griffith, Trucksville Postmaster, announces that applications are now being considered for the posts of substitute clerk and substitute carrier.

Applicants will take a Civil Service examination to determine aptitude and intelligence. Appointments become permanent after the first year. An examination for physical fitness will be given.

The list of those eligible which is established by Civil Service examinations, will be combined with the existing registry, and appointments made from this register as need arises in the Trucksville Postoffice. Extra Christmas help will be recruited from this register. It is anticipated that a Substitute Clerk will be hired from the register after January, 1958, to work during illnesses and vacations of the regular clerks.

Pay begins at $1.82 per hour, attaining a maximum of $2.19 under present laws.

Applications will be accepted by the Postmaster at Trucksville or by the Director, Third U.S. Civil Service Region, 407 Customhouse, Second and Chestnut Streets, Philadelphia 6, Pa.

Explicit information on type of examinations may be obtained from Mr. Griffith. No experience is necessary.

Timely Reminders from
The Pennsylvania State University
College of Agriculture

Little Value Found—Tests conducted by the U. S. Bureau of Standards on more than 150 fuel and oil additives showed that none made any important improvement in engine performance. Some were corrosive to hard metal bearings. So reports Burton Horne, Penn State extension agricultural engineer.

Protect Pigs—Cocklebur is poisonous to pigs when it is in the young, two-leaf stage. Dwight Younkin, Penn State extension livestock specialist, warns farmers to keep pigs off pasture in which cockleburs are growing until the plants can be killed or they are too large to poison the animals.

Keep Eggs Cool—Heat destroys egg quality. Carl Dossin, Penn State extension poultry specialist, recommends gathering eggs several times a day and removing the animal heat at once. Then store in a cool place. Cross-ventilation in the henhouse helps both the layers and the eggs.

Test Wheat Moisture—A simple moisture test will tell when wheat is ready to be combined. Frank Bamer, Penn State extension agronomist, says all you need are a teaspoon, a wide-mouth bottle with a screw cap, and free-flowing ammonium chloride.

Control Insects—You don't have to slap at biting insects. Stanley Gesell, Penn State extension entomologist, reminds that effective repellents are available to protect people from the discomfort and annoyance of the biting insects.

Use Right Chemical—For control of crabgrass, be sure you get the right chemical, cautions Albert Cooper, Penn State extension agronomist.

Card Of Thanks

The family of the late David Edwards wishes to thank friends and neighbors who sent flowers, loaned cars, or rendered personal services during their recent bereavement.
