Senator Joe Clark Gives Insight Into Problems Facing The Nation

Favors Raising Unemployment Benefits; Seeks Tax Benefits For Teachers And Small Business

By JOE CLARK
Senator From Pennsylvania

Checking The Recession

Each week in January, 60,000 Pennsylvanians lost their jobs. The total number of unemployed in mid-January was 435,000 or 9.4 percent of the labor force. Another 100,000 were working half normal time or less. By the time you read this, the number will have increased.

Since Labor Day, 45,000 workers in Pennsylvania have used up their unemployment compensation payments. Most of these workers' families are now on relief.

While we are still well above depression levels the employment situation is serious enough to call for immediate action at all governmental levels. Nobody wants to be a "prophet of doom and gloom;" but we won't end this recession by sitting on our hands and issuing hopeful statements about upturn in the economy.

What can a Senator do? Unfortunately, not much that will help immediately. New legislation takes time to pass and more time to become effective.

In our Housing Subcommittee, I am supporting the broadest possible "anti-recession" program. The homebuilding industry was depressed by "tight money" even before the current recession. Present home construction, although up ever so slightly, is barely 50 percent of what we need. Funds for financing construction of low-cost houses would give the economy a needed boost. Urban redevelopment and public housing projects would put people back to work.

I am also strongly supporting Federal aid for school construction. Pennsylvania alone has a backlog of 400 needed schools, costing $350 million, which cannot be built because the state hasn't got the money to build them. Unfortunately, prospects for this legislation were undermined when the President withdrew the support he gave school construction last year.

Highway and airport construction must be expedited to make new wealth-creating jobs.

An Immediate Speed-up

Equally important is defense procurement. If we were doing all that we should to meet the Soviet advance — making missiles, aircraft, submarines, radar — we would not be worrying now about what to do about the recession; there wouldn't be one. The difficulty is we cut back defense spending just when we should have been speeding it up. Even now a greater sense of urgency is badly needed in Washington.

The President has announced a program of post office construction, but he made it contingent on approval by Congress of the highly controversial 5-cent stamp for out-of-town letters. In any case, this program would not be ready to go forward for several months and is intended to be spread out over several years. As Postmaster General Summerfield admitted, it will have little effect in stemming the recession.

Under these circumstances, I prepared a letter to the President calling attention to the emergency in Pennsylvania and asking him to accelerate military procurement and public works schedules wherever possible. A large part of the Pennsylvania Congressional delegation joined me in this appeal, including all twelve Democrats, but unfortunately, most of my Republican colleagues refused to join, which weakened its effectiveness.

Raising Unemployment Benefits

Our unemployment compensation system has been allowed to deteriorate steadily since it was first established in 1939, with the result that it is a far less effective cushion in hard times than it was then. Not one state among the 48 now pays the unemployed as high a proportion of average wages as was the case in 1939.

This comes about in part from inter-state competition for industry. If Pennsylvania, for example, were to set standards far out of line with other states, it might lose industry to states willing to tolerate substandard conditions. The result is a pressure on each state not to do better, but to do worse, than its neighbors.

The answer to this dilemma is national standards for benefits — which is the purpose of a bill which I joined Senator Kennedy of Massachusetts and 15 other senators in introducing early this month.

Our bill would require each state to pay benefits for at least 39 weeks. (The duration in Pennsylvania is now 30 weeks.)

It would raise the ceiling on weekly benefits in Pennsylvania from $35 to $50. Subject to this maximum, each worker's benefits would be at least 50 percent of his normal weekly wage, as at present.

The Fervor For Peace

It is ironic that in the whole of our government, only a tiny handful of people with a minuscule budget have been working on the complex problems of disarmament and peace. Mr. Stassen, who was the President's advisor on disarmament had only 40 people working with him. Millions, in uniform and out, are manning our present armaments and designing new ones.

There is no question about the need for strengthening our defenses, but at the same time America must put every ounce of effort and wisdom we can muster into exploring all possible avenues toward peace.

Bills Sponsored

Since the new session began, I have joined various of my colleagues in introducing the following measures:

TAX RELIEF FOR TEACHERS: A bill to permit teachers to deduct for income tax purposes money spent at summer school or in other courses to maintain or improve their proficiency. This is simple justice to permit teachers, like other persons, to deduct what amounts to a "business expense."

TAX RELIEF FOR SMALL BUSINESS: The most important provision of this seven-point bill would allow small businesses to deduct up to $10,000 of profits which are retained in the firm and reinvested. This should help offset the difficulty small businesses have in obtaining capital which their large competitors can readily obtain in the open market.

BILLBOARD CONTROL: A bill to give states a financial incentive to effectively regulate billboards along the interstate highway system, which, if we do not act, is on its way to becoming a garish network of neon-lighted tunnels.

AMENDMENT TO THE MINE SAFETY ACT: A bill to extend the Federal mine inspection program to small mines now exempt from it. These mines produced only 7 percent of our coal tonnage but accounts for more than a quarter of mine accidents in 1957. It is evident that Federal inspection will help save lives.

Save The Capitol!

I am supporting efforts to block remodeling of the Capitol's east facade, one of its few original and unchanged portions, where Presidents are inaugurated. There must be other ways to expand spacewise without tampering with America's most historic shrine. I testified at Senate Public Works Committee hearings recently and hope we will be successful in preserving the beauty and tradition of the original Capitol.

Joe Mundy Is Only Hope Here

Shavertown Man Liked By Everybody

Many friends and admirers of Joe Mundy, Shavertown, are urging him to run for Sixth District Representative or Senator.

Active in Democratic circles, Joe also numbers hundreds of Republicans among his friends.

They point out that the Republican powerhouse is in the Back Mountain area and that Mundy, who is well liked, is the only Democrat who can crack the powerhouse since he has a big following here.

Here is their reasoning. In the Primary last May Mundy opposed John Pope, Sixth District chairman, for Prothonotary. He battled an entrenched county organization with 1,200 State jobs and plenty of money.

Mundy on the other hand did not hire a single worker. The results were almost unbelievable. He polled a record high vote of a 11,000 for an independent Democrat.

He swept the Seventh District (Wilkes-Barre City) by more than 500 votes and also carried the Third District (greater Pittston) Duryea, Dupont, Jenkins Township, Pittston Township and city.

In his own Sixth District, he carried the Back Mountain 5 to 1 and his former home town of Exeter by about 3 to 1. He also swept Wyoming, West Wyoming and Forty Fort.

In the Senatorial District he carried every ward in heavily populated Newport and received a flattering vote in Hazleton city.

Veteran politicians believe that Mundy, a resident of the Back Mountain, may have the potentiality to take the measure of the present Republican Representative Roy Parry of Luzerne. If Mundy can't do it no other Democrat can.

In 1956, Parry is reported to have told Mundy that he was darn glad he was not opposing Joe Mundy as his opponent.

It is not likely that Mundy could be prevailed upon to enter the race for State Senator, though such a race might be a humdinger as both are from the Back Mountain. Mundy and Flack have a high personal regard for each other.

Whether Joe enters either contest is a question but it is certain he has raised Democratic hopes in this rock ribbed Republican area.

No less a vote getter than Congressman Daniel Flood said at a Testimonial Dinner that his own high vote in the Back Mountain area was around 600 until the Jeffersonian Club with Joe Mundy started to spearhead his campaign. The results were that Flood got 2,600 in 1954 and 2,800 in 1956, and that, brother, is vote getting for a Democrat.
