Precious Heritage In Memory Of Her Father

Mrs. Alvah Jones, Main Street, Dallas, has a precious heritage for herself and her children in the memories she cherishes of her father. When Vincent Henson's life ended Monday morning in Mercy Hospital, his premature death brought to an end a life which had been dedicated to the service of others. His last words were a prayer for a boy in the same hospital who was having his leg amputated.

Mr. Henson, in all his too brief life, brought up fourteen children, in addition to his own daughter. He took the orphans at varying ages, sheltering them until they could fend for themselves. When his wife and daughter looked for his new suit in order to array him suitably for his burial, they found that he had given it away to somebody who needed it worse than he did. This was typical of a man who felt for everybody, and who gave himself and his possessions with no thought of return.

His wallet contained a clipping which had impressed him some years ago:

Loving Father, good and kind, The best this world could ever find, For all he knew, he did his best— For those God gave him eternal rest.

A native of Leicester, England, he came to this country eleven years ago, settling in Wilkes-Barre, where he was employed by the DeLuxe Game Corporation.

He leaves his widow, the former Grace Smith, his one child, Mrs. Jones; two grandchildren; and a sister, Mrs. Laura Payne, still in England.

Rev. William McClelland officiated at services held yesterday afternoon from the Williams Funeral Home. Burial was in Huntsville Cemetery.
