GETTING THE MOST... FROM YOUR GARDEN

By Lyman N. White

ASSOCIATED SEED GROWERS

Outdoors in the summer, insects are everywhere—millions of them, high and low in the air over your garden, others on or below the ground and on your plants. Some insects help our plants, carrying pollen from plant to plant while gathering their food, eating other harmful insects, or improving the soil by their operations in it. Others harm our plants, so we seek to control or destroy them. To do this effectively, we should know something about them.

Most insects lay eggs, though aphids, or plant lice, are born ready for action. From the eggs may come larvae, otherwise known as grubs, maggots, caterpillars or worms. A larva feeds greedily, then changes into a pupa, which lies low until it emerges as a butterfly, beetle, fly or a moth. Some, like the Mexican bean beetle, skip one stage, and some, like grasshoppers, come from the egg as a small form of the adult.

Some larvae live underground, where they feed on roots. Among these are the white grubs so often turned up by the spade. Patches of dead grass in a lawn may be caused by Japanese beetle grubs at work below. Young cabbage plants may wilt and die when the cabbage maggot, which later is a gray fly, emerges from eggs laid on the soil and goes down to the roots. They also invade radish roots in early spring. To protect cabbage, broccoli or cauliflower plants, apply chlordane dust to roots when transplanting. Chlordane will also control cabbage maggots in radishes when applied in the furrow before covering the seed at planting time. Chlordane is also a good weapon against cut worms which chew the stems of young plants. Apply to soil surrounding plants.

The white cabbage butterfly lays eggs, on the underside of leaves, which become green cabbage worms and eat the leaves. Malathion dust gives good control; apply weekly until ten days before harvest. Methoxychlor dust will rot the Mexican bean beetle, a vegetarian, unlike its aphid-eating kin, the ladybird. Malathion and methoxychlor are among the safest and most effective of the newer chemicals and comprise the "active ingredients" of several popular insecticide mixtures. Applied to the whorl of young plants they will control corn borers; dusted on the silks they will prevent much injury from corn earworms.

Handpicking is the simplest way to control some insect pests, for example the tomato hornworm, so called because of the harmless spike on its rear end. Handpicking is also a simple way to get rid of Japanese and similar beetles. They are sluggish at dusk and may be readily knocked into a jar half filled with water, topped by a layer of oil, in which they soon perish.

Aphids are among the most common and harmful pests in the garden, sucking the vital juices of plants and transmitting various plant diseases. The first rule in defense is to begin dusting the moment they appear. Malathion is the most effective weapon for gardeners. Malathion or methoxychlor will also control the tiny, dark flea beetles which chew small round holes in the leaves of young plants and the small, darting leaf-hoppers, which spread plant diseases.

Always read the labels carefully when buying and before applying garden sprays and dusts. They tell you what's inside the container and the precautions to follow when using the contents.

NEXT WEEK: Summer Vegetables.

Dallas Post
Dear Sirs:

In re: Mr. Lee, hounddog

A few days after Christmas, 1958, Mr. Lee, our dog, supplied your paper with news items under the Title "Christmas Complications include Loy Bath, Lost Beagle, Broken Leg." This led to two more articles. I never did get the opportunity to thank you for the advertising and subsequently recovery of Mr. Lee. I want to take this opportunity to thank you, and likewise tell you that Mr. Lee has gone to his eternal reward in "Dog Heaven". He was hit by a car on heavily trafficked Roosevelt Boulevard here in Philadelphia.

He was the most lovable dog a family could ever wish for and is sadly missed by not only our family but every kid in the neighborhood.

Yours truly,
Walter A. Zell

Our regrets over Mr. Lee's demise. He picked himself a nice family. Hope you got yourself another dog; not to take his place, but to fill the gap.

WANT THE NAME OF A GOOD TRANQUILIZING PILL?

Dear Editor:

I know that this will bring the wrath of a lot of people on my head, but enough is enough!

It is now 9:45 p. m. and those racing cars are still going strong in the Shevertown Shopping Center parking lot. Do they realize how much that noise vibrates and carries, or don't they care?

Are children driving? They should be home in bed.

Are adults driving? I wish they were home in bed so my children could sleep. They have to get up for school tomorrow.

Why is it that when any sport or event is started, it is always carried to an extreme?

I have no objection to it in the daytime, but please, give us a little peace and quiet in the evening.

A Sleepy Parent.

To The Dallas Post:

Since I come from a long line of ministers and school teachers—and taught school for fifteen years myself—I feel I have a right to say something on the thankless job of serving a community as school director.

We in Dallas have been fortunate in having a majority of qualified, intelligent and unselfish men direct our schools ever since I have lived here.

Durelle Scott is one of these. He has served us faithfully for six years with no thought of political recognition or financial gain. During that time he has missed only two School Board meetings. He has been president of the PTA and is active in another cultural institution, the Library, where he serves as director.

He is intelligent, educated, conservative and a good neighbor. He is quiet and unassuming—yet has the courage to battle for principles. In his vocation as rector, he is fitted to help plan the spending economically of over a million dollars for a new school. I know all these things about Durelle—because I taught him—and live just up the street from him.

Durelle and Kay Scott have four fine children, leaders in our schools

I do not write this letter to belittle any other candidate—but only to say that we are lucky to have a busy man like Scotty agree to place his name on the ballot!

If you have been encouraged by the progress of our schools and are eager to have one of the finest school systems in the State—go to the polls and vote for a man who has been striving constantly for that goal.
