Forebears Lived At Lake In 1806

Worthington Family Came From Connecticut

Lewis Worthington, whose family has been identified with Harveys Lake ever since a forebear, Joseph Worthington, settled there in 1806, died Thursday morning at his home on Carpenter Road. He was buried in the churchyard of the church he helped to build in Idetown Monday afternoon. Officiating at the services in the Bronson Funeral Home were Rev. John J. Jones, Rev. Kenneth O'Neill and a grand nephew, Rev. Joseph Fiske, pastor of Ashley Methodist Church, and namesake of the original Lake settler.

Mr. Worthington, 87, had been confined to bed and rocking chair for the past two years. A fractured hip five years ago did not make satisfactory union at his advanced age.

He was a carpenter by trade. He served on the official board and board of trustees of Idetown Methodist Church, and was Sunday School superintendent for some years. More recently, he attended Outlet Bible Tabernacle. He was a great Bible student.

His Parents were the late Henry and Alice Hunter Worthington. The original settler at Harveys Lake, Joseph Worthington, built the log cabin on the hill above the lake long before there were any roads from the Lake to Wilkes-Barre. He owned a large section of lake-front property at one time before it was gradually sold off to accommodate other settlers. The Worthington home on Carpenter Road was Lewis Worthington's birthplace and life-long residence.

Early Worthingtons published a newspaper in Wilkes-Barre, the Anti-Masonic Advocate, predecessor of the Wilkes-Barre Record. Excerpts from an 1836 issue shows a subscription list of 1,718.

The Worthington family had the first post office at Harveys Lake and the first telephone. At the time of the original settling at Harveys Lake, this part of Pennsylvania was considered part of Connecticut, where Worthingtons had lived since the days of the Pilgrim Fathers.

Mr. Worthington is survived by a daughter, Mrs. Hazel Hoover, Harveys Lake; a son, Edgar, Allentown; one grandson, E. Worthington, Allentown; six great-grandsons, Miss

A pony, ducks, geese, registered Dachshund, Boxer and Doberman dogs will be sold at the Library Auction.

A number of Hartmann Wardrobe trunks, complete with keys and in excellent condition, have been contributed to the Library Auction.

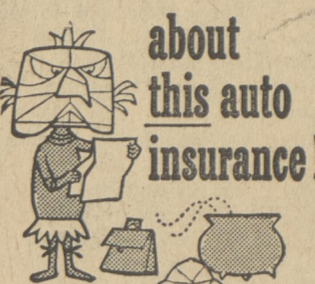

Ruth Worthington, Harveys Lake, is a niece.
